24-Year Mystery of the Sea Is Solved

Smith to Make Tax Reform Campaign

Councilman Files More Names in Mayoralty Contest.

Councilman Earnest E. Smith has filed 325 more signatures to his papers and promises a general round-up of signatures for next week until the required 5,000 are obtained.

"Taxation reform," Councilman Smith declared, "will be the one directing point of my endeavors if I am elected Mayor. I am pledged to humanity with economy, and not the kind experienced under the Hibbard administration. The city is not the United States Steel Corporation; if we cut our payrolls too much we increase the expense of our almshouses, hospitals, jails, etc.

"The Citizens' Municipal League offers nothing constructive, while I pledge my best efforts toward twelve specific and demonstrated improvements. Saving money in all that interests the Citizens' Municipal League, but what about raising money?"

JUAREZ FALLS TO MEXICAN REBELS

This is the last port of entry along the northern border which the federals had held, and its capture by the rebels it is expected will lead to the raising of the embargo on arms. It is a tremendous rebel victory.

On the El Paso side of the river the battle was marked by a terrific rain of bullets and projectiles from the six machine guns and field pieces used by the combatants. Windows were broken here, and bullets lodged in every wall. The residents were awakened by the first roar of the battle, and the city was in terror till the firing ceased three hours later.

The Story of Troy Again.

The story of the rebel victory has become known only in fragments. The best information seems to be that General Villa took a hint from the old Greek ruse of the Trojan horse. The rebels captured a federal troop train which was on its way to Juarez, handled the federals out and put rebel troops in the cars. The train pulled into the station without molestation. At the same time troops had been deployed on all sides of the town. The forces from the train scattered upon a well conceived plan, and the attack began almost simultaneously all over the city.

The first shots were fired at 2:30 in the morning. It was after 5 o'clock when the battle ended. In the darkness of early morning, a terrific struggle was waged.

Daylight showed a town swept by fire and sword. Dead lay in almost every street. Every building had the marks of shot upon its walls. O. C. Segger, son, an American citizen, was found alive at the wheel of his automobile in front of Keno Hall—a clean drilled but let hole through his heart.

American's Car Riddled.

Villa's victory was made complete when fifty federals who had kept up a resistance near the race track were all killed. While that last act of the conflict was taking place Villa was organizing his city government.

Villa's officers expressed their regret over the killing of Seggerson. He was the only American victim identified. The rebels say that a revolver was fired from his automobile before they fired upon him. His car was riddled by a volley.

A party of Americans, including the correspondent of the International News Service, crossed the bridge with General Scott's permission after fighting ceased and brought Seggerson's body to United States soil.

Perfect order is being maintained in Juarez. Villa closed all the saloons and had hundreds of barrels of liquor destroyed. All idlers were ordered to their homes.

Storm Centre at Customs House.

The main attack of the rebels centered on the custom house. In fifteen minutes' fighting they captured this strong hold and swarmed upward to the roof, turning it into a fortress against its former masters. By this time El Paso had awaked to the din, and residents here rushed down to the river banks. Across the International bridge a stream of refugees was pouring. They came singly or in pairs at first, many of them on mules. Then the throng increased and at 3:30 in the morning the bridge was packed from rail to rail by the frantic throng.

Major R. E. L. Mitchie, adjutant to General Hugh L. Scott, commanding the United States troops on border patrol here, immediately took command of the United States troops when the fighting began. He threw out patrols to keep people of El Paso back of the danger line.

Border Patrols Doubled.

Street cars were hurried from the barns to Fort Bliss to bring additional soldiers to the border. Among these was the Fifteenth Cavalry, which arrived here yesterday from Fort Myer, Va., Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Fort Sheridan, Ill.

These troops were massed along the river front. At the International bridge they allowed refugees to pass, but were prepared to turn back any belligerents. Many federal soldiers, as the fighting grew on, disarmed and surrendered to the American soldiery.

Major Mitchie also stationed artillery on a bright commanding Juarez and environs to protect American property in the captured city of 17 hours' fighting.

Within a few minutes after the battle roar had been heard on the outskirts of the town, it concentrated in the centre of Juarez. It was estimated here that at least twenty machine guns and six heavy field cannon were in action.

Reporters who tried to get into Juarez were turned back by Mexican soldiers at the southern end of the Rio Grande bridge. These troops said that insurgents under General Villa had captured the town.

Villa Announces Victory.

The Juarez arsenal and barracks were captured at 4:50 o'clock. After the capture of the main plaza the firing died down and soon ceased entirely. One of General Villa's staff officers then called up the office of the El Paso Times and announced that the constitutionalists were in possession of Juarez. He expressed hope that no bullets had fallen in El Paso.

There was some fighting about the Juarez race track shortly before 7 o'clock, when a detachment of constitutionalists turned a machine gun upon a detachment of federals who were hiding behind some burns. General Castro was said to be with them.

The noise of the shots stampeded the racehorses stabled there, and many of them broke from their stalls and ran wild upon the track. They are valued at $250,000. Two more machine guns got into action. Villa deployed a heavy attachment of men around the track to prevent the escape of the federals. Federal refugees concentrated near the race track and taking up their position behind the concrete stadium, they answered the rebel fire till they were dislodged.

Slaughter at Dance Hall.

The greatest loss of life occurred at a dance hall in Cale-Trablo, where a number of federal officers were attending a ball. The rebels surrounded the building, intending to capture the federals, but the alarm was given and the officers ranked forth into the street only to be shot down like rabbits.

General Castro, commander of the Juarez garrison, could not be found after the battle and was supposed to have escaped with some of his men into the southern foothills.

General Villa commanded in person the army which captured the city and took precautions to prevent looting. He ordered the military band to play the Mexican national anthem, which caused great enthusiasm.

The main attack was led by Colonel Talamentes, son of Senora Talamentes, the Sonora "Joan of Arc," who is a commissioned officer in the rebel army. The position of the dead showed that the heaviest fighting had occurred in front of the American House, Keno Hall, the Customs House, the "Old Stone Church" and in the Plaza.

American Red Cross Aid.

An orderly for General Villa called on United States Consul Edwards and informed him officially of the rebel capture. Mr. Edwards was informed that any Americans who were killed or wounded had been shot accidentally.

At dawn American doctors crossed the International bridge and offered their service. Red Cross nurses also crossed at Ellis Island upon the same errand.

Among the rebels was "Hill" Burk, an American soldier of fortune and expert machine gun operator. He gave the following account of the rebel movements:

"With 2,500 men General Villa left Terrazas for Juarez, leaving 1,000 men behind to continue the siege of Chihuahua. We made our way northward quickly and quietly. When on the outskirts of Juarez we captured a federal troop train without firing a shot. We then made a concerted attack upon the outposts, which were lax, not expecting an attack.

"During the battle only five rebels were killed, so far as we could learn when the firing ceased. The federal loss was heavier. We expected to capture Castro, commander of the garrison, but could not find him when the battle ceased. Villa gave orders to protect all foreigners and foreign property. Our next campaign will be against Columbus.

Diaz Silent on Mexican Crisis

HAVANA, Nov. 15.—Editor Boston AMERICAN—My wounds and my detention here under bond do not permit me to make a public statement regarding my ideas of the situation in Mexico.

FELIX DIAZ.

JAMES E. MAGUIRE, the East Boston editor, as he appears today with his head swathed in a bandage, covering wounds received in his encounter with Representative Thomas J. Giblin.

Thomas J. Giblin, the East Boston politician who was given a two months' sentence at Deer Island for assaulting James Maguire, editor of the East Boston Free Press, today began a vigorous fight to win public sentiment and to prepare for his trial in the Superior Court, to which he has appealed. He said today:

I want to say that even if I have a two months' sentence hanging over me—I've a lot of friends in East Boston still. Many, many people have told me that the papers have not treated me right. I met at least twenty today who said it was outrageous the way the case was handled in the newspapers.

My side of the case has not been given proper publicity. The evidence about my mother was not printed. It is a scheme to do me up. Every friend of mine is sore.

Mr. Giblin—who weighs about 220 pounds—does not deny that he knocked down Maguire, who is several inches shorter than the politician, and weighs about a hundred pounds less. He blames Maguire for his defeat in his campaign for re-election to the Legislature.

ANOTHER NOTE SENT TO HUERTA, ACCORDING TO BRYAN ADMISSION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Secretary of State Bryan admitted today that another note had been sent to President Huerta through Charge O'Shaughnessy. The American Charge will deliver this communication today or tomorrow. Upon the reply of the Mexican President will depend whether the United States will withdraw its embassy from Mexico City.

The Secretary of State further asserted that all the foreign nations have stated their intention of supporting the United States in its Mexican policy and added that Japan also has made plain the fact that it will support President Wilson. News to this effect reached the State Department today directly from Tokio and removed doubt from the minds of government officials concerning the attitude of the Japanese government.

It had been feared here that Japan would attempt to block the American policy in Mexico by supplying President Huerta with arms, ammunition and other supplies. Now, however, these assurances have been received from all world powers that the United States is to have a free hand in settling the Mexican trouble its own way, administration officials are certain that President Wilson's policies will be brought to a successful termination within a short time.

The feeling is strong in Washington that President Huerta has reached the end of his career, and that another big fight will see another head of the Mexican government.

The optimism noticeable in administration circles over the Mexican situation that prevailed today by news that England's envoy in Mexico City had informed General Huerta that he would not be supported by Great Britain and that the French Foreign Office had agreed to support the American policy.

DE LA BARRA AMONG SIX CONSIDERED AS SUCCESSOR TO HUERTA

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 15.—Six men are prominently mentioned today as possible successors to General Huerta as President of Mexico. They are.

Francisco de la Barra, former Minister to France.

Miguel Covarrubias, former Minister to Russia.

Francisco Carbajal De Ross, supreme magistrate of the Supreme Court.

Pedro Lascurian, Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Madero cabinet.

Manuel Garza Aldape, Minister of the Interior.

PANKHURST IN BOSTON; HAILS FRIEND AND FOE

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the indomitable mother of the militant suffrage movement, arrived in Boston today.

She gave the AMERICAN two messages, one for her friends, the other for her enemies.

To her friends in suffrage she says: "Courage and loyalty for the fight."

This defiance is hurled at the "antis!" "The 'antis' are trying to keep back a cause which is like keeping back the ocean with a broom."

Meanwhile her enemies, the "antis," were busy. They schemed to reduce the interest in Mrs. Pankhurst's meeting at Tremont Temple tonight, also to cut into her cash receipts by stopping the sale of the Pankhurst book and newspaper.

They seek to have any one arrested who is selling the book or paper on the ground that they are unsaleable for circulation. The book is called "Plain Facts About a Great Evil." The paper is The Suffragette, published in England.

Mrs. Eleanor W. Allen, Mrs. Charles H. Fiske, Jr., and Mrs. Ezra Thayer, prominent "antis," went to police headquarters yesterday and asked that the police stop the sale of the Pankhurst literature. Miss Allen said when they came out:

To Hold Up Literature.

"The sale was stopped in New York city and must be in Boston. I hope Bostonians will not patronize Mrs. Pankhurst when she comes here. Every dollar contributed is so much more toward the militant cause in England."

Mrs. Pankhurst sends this message to Bostonians through the Boston AMERICAN:

What we want in this great cause is courage as well as loyalty. Women must have more faith in their own sex. After all, when we come to Boston and remember what we have suffered for our rights in England, those of the women active which cast off British rule in Boston by throwing the tea overboard.

To the Boston antis she sends her greetings:

Remember Mrs. Partington, who lived near the sea. She tried to keep the ocean back with a broom. The antis are not unlike her. They are trying to keep back a cause, which is like keeping back the ocean with a broom. What they do will not affect this world-wide movement.

After uttering the greetings quoted above Mrs. Pankhurst gave the AMERICAN an extended interview as follows:

"During my trip in America I have been received cordially on all sides, I came to America to raise money. Our expenses for the cause in England are about five hundred pounds a week. In your money that would mean about twenty-five hundred dollars.

"At one meeting in England we received fifteen thousand pounds. In Hartford, Ct., we collected fourteen hundred dollars. We feel over in England that american women want to hear about our conditions there. We also feel that they will be willing to aid us.

"How much money do you hope to take back with you?" was asked.

"I don't really know."

"Would not $500,000 cover it?"

Expects to Be Arrested.

"You can see for that, if you please. Many wealthy women are interested in the work that we are doing in my country. The English government is trying to dry up our treasury and wear out our patience in many ways. We must have money to carry on our work. I do not say that I shall carry back $500,000, but certainly that sum would be very acceptable to our work and would be a great tribute to the generosity of America. You have helped here in this country Irish Home Rule by large contributions. You have helped Michael Davitt and John P. Redmond, and I believe America will respond with a large sum after I have finished my trip.

"We have many salaried workers. Some of these are stenographers, and we must see that all our workers are paid for their services."

"Do you expect to be arrested when you go back?"

and eleven months to serve. But I shall never serve that sentence.

"I suppose someone will be on hand to put me under the others of the law when I put my foot upon English soil. But I tell you that I shall endure it and not resist. We have now already five or six prominent suffragists in prison in England.

"I will start a hunger strike and they'll have to let me out quite pretty soon. Some of the women home are refusing to take even water, now, you know. My daughter Sylvia has started a sleep strike. She has refused to sleep at night."

"What effect had your release from Ellis Island upon your country?"

"It had a splendid effect. Why, had I been sent back to my country after coming here it would have brought lasting disgrace upon this nation, which is the land of liberty. Then I imagine in England they expected me to be sent back. To have sent me back would have embittered the cause and made people fight all the harder for their rights.

"I am not recommending militancy in this country," added Mrs. Pankhurst with great earnestness, as if this remark was the chief one to be emphasized. "I have nothing to do with your methods. All I want to make plain is that you understand our methods in England. Your own independence came through fighting for it. Why should people of America think it impossible for an English woman to fight for her rights, even to the extent of using force?

"Have not all great and permanent reforms come through this agency? Did I not go along quietly for thirty years without any hesitancy in my make-up?

"People in America must know that we have borne patiently our trials in England and were driven to take the methods which have been available in other reforms."

Mrs Pankhurst condemned the cat-and-mouse act, giving in detail some explanations of its applications.

Dr. G. B. Sawtelle of Malden Dead at 76

Dr. George B. Sawtelle, aged seventy-six, of No. 14 Florence street, Malden, is dead from heart disease. He had practiced in Malden for forty-five years and was a member of the Malden Hospital staff.

Mrs. Pankhurst Refuses to Fly

Declines to Come to Boston with McGee via Air Route.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 15.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst's militant tendencies have yet to reach the point of defying the air. She politely declined a hearty invitation from "Jack" McGee, the Rhode Island aviator, to be borne to Boston in his flying machine.

McGee said to Mrs. Pankhurst, "Let me take you up to Boston in my biplane."

"This is American enterprise," said Mrs. Pankhurst with a smile.

"Perfectly safe," said McGee, "and I'll be ready at a minute's notice."

"Why don't you?" "O, do, Mrs. Pankhurst," "Mr. McGee is a perfectly safe pilot," and so on, were the encouraging comments made by a group of Mrs. Pankhurst's friends. But the "Mother of Militantism" would not be cajoled into a flight.

ANNUAL AUTUMN SALE

Begins 8:30 A. M. Monday, Nov, 17th

This is our Annual Catalogue Sale, which, for a peculiar reason, is more important than ever this year. You may not now remember that the weather all through the month of October was the worst for the retail dry goods business that has been known in many years, and while our sales for the month showed a gain over the largest previous October, we believe this was not generally true. This weather condition led some manufacturers and importers to be anxious and led them to make contracts with us for the best goods that are made, at exceedingly low prices, to be ready for this sale.

This Sale Includes

SUITS, GOWNS, COATS AND WAISTS FOR WOMEN, MISSES AND CHILDREN

Also

Hosiery, Gloves, Underwear, Household Linens, Blankets, Muslin Underwear, Italian Silk Underwear, Infants' Wear, Fancy Table Linens, Corsets, Negligees, Silks, Dress Goods, Handbags, Neckwear, Jewelry, Upholstery and Curtain Fabrics, Christmas Ribbons, Millinery

If you have not received a catalogue of this Sale, it will be well worth your while to ask for one on the Street Floor as you come in. It goes into minute details and will help you to take full advantage of the opportunities offered.

COURTS CLASH, KANTOR IS GIVEN $20,000 GEMS

United States Marshal Guy Murchie has turned over to Sol B. Kantor the $20,000 worth of diamonds taken from Kantor when he was arrested recently in connection with an alleged bankruptcy fraud.

Marshal Murchie in so doing disregards an injunction secured in the Massachusetts Supreme Court by Percy A. Atherton, trustee in the bankruptcy case of Arthur W. Cross, a diamond merchant, who is also under arrest.

Judge Morton of the United States Court decided that Marshal Murchie should turn the property over to its lawful owner, and as the diamonds were taken from Kantor they were returned to him.

Atherton, the trustee, gave notice that he will appeal from Judge Morton's decision.

It is said that a man of the name of John H. Hinton, an Englishman, is the real owner of the jewels.

The Elders Sanitarium, located at 668 Main St. St. Joseph, Mo., has published a free book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit and how it can be banished in from one to five days at home.

Men who have used tobacco for more than fifty years have tried this method, and say it is entirely successful, and in addition to curing the craving for tobacco, has improved their health wonderfully. This method banishes the desire for tobacco, no matter whether it is smoking, chewing, cigarettes or snuff dipping.

Cured His Rupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago, and had to wear a truss. Finally I got one that relieved me some, but it was a constant source of annoyance. Finally the rupture caused me severe pain, and I could hardly stand up straight. Then I got a truss that relieved me entirely. Although I am following hard work as a carpenter, there was no operation, nor has there been any trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a truss similar to mine without cost, if you write to me. Eugene M. Pinkey, Carpenter, 780 Macomb St., Detroit, Mich. Please do not use this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—there may be a life at stake—the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

MRS. PANKHURST CALLS FOR BIG WAKEFIELD MEETING

Mrs. Wakefield is just another case of the old, old story of woman the victim of man's laws. New England women should stop this hanging in the interest of both humanity and justice. Boston women should flock to this meeting tonight in Faneuil Hall to show their feeling by their numbers.—Mrs. Pankhurst's appeal for a big protest meeting in Faneuil Hall tonight.

MEETING TO PROTEST HANGING OF WOMAN

The mass meeting which is to be held in Faneuil Hall tonight to protest against the hanging of Mrs. Bessie J. Wakefield in Connecticut was warmly endorsed today by Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the mother of the militant suffrage movement in England.

Mrs. Pankhurst called upon Boston to flock to this meeting and to show, by their presence, their sense of outrage against the proposed execution of Mrs. Wakefield.

Mrs. Pankhurst came to Boston from Providence today with a busy schedule mapped out for her but she declared that, if it is possible thing, she will attend the Faneuil Hall meeting herself. Before she left Providence she said:

Victim of Man's Law.

"I am thoroughly opposed to the hanging of Mrs. Wakefield. I am completely in sympathy with the Wakefield protest meeting which is to be held tonight in Boston.

"No jury of men has a right to order this woman hanged and I hope that a tremendous crowd will attend this mass meeting in Faneuil Hall, to show by their numbers how strong a feeling is aroused against this execution.

"I have been invited to attend. I shall make every effort to be there, to show my sympathy with the purpose of the meeting.

"Mrs. Wakefield is just another case of the old, old story of women, the victim of man's laws.

"New England women should stop this hanging in the interests of both humanity and justice. Boston women should flock to this meeting to show their feeling by their numbers."

The meeting will be called to order at 8 o'clock. It promises to be one of the largest and most impressive gatherings ever held in Massachusetts to protest against a death penalty, especially one in another State.

The Prison Reform Association and the Anti-Death Penalty League are both back of the gathering. Herbert L. Baker, a prominent Boston lawyer, will preside.

Hanging Is "Revenge."

Among the speakers will be men who are known as vigorous crusaders against the death penalty, such as Rev. William H. Van Allen, Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham, James H. Vahey, H. H. Patten and Joseph Santosuosso.

Mrs. Florence Spooner of the Prison Reform Association will read an important statement.

Former Justice F. P. Rowell of Newport, Vt., is coming to attend this meeting. He says:

"I wouldn't miss that meeting in Faneuil Hall for anything. After twenty years on the bench I ought to have some firm convictions. One of my firmest is regarding capital punishment.

"Ever since we hanged Mary Rogers it has made a good many of us think about capital punishment. This is national prison for all murderers. All pardoning power should be done away with.

"This business of hanging people must stop. It is cruel. It is revengeful."

H. H. Patten of Maine, a former county attorney, will speak on the history of capital punishment in Massachusetts. Mr. Patten is said to have some startling revelations along that line.

Mrs. Louis Nelson, secretary of the Woman's Homestead Association, urges every woman to attend the meeting.

"We want to make our punishment corrective, not revengeful," said Mrs. Nelson.

DRINK HABIT

For the good of those who are victims, directly or indirectly, of the drink habit I have written and published a very interesting illustrated book which describes how I was freed completely from the craving and for several years I have not had any desire to touch a drop of anything alcoholic. My book contains information, by following which thousands of drinkers have admittedly been saved.

Many men who do not want to be freed of drink curse, have been secretly saved by wives, mothers or sisters. They did not realize what was happening until they found all desire had left them—they couldn't drink any more whiskey or beer—then they rejoiced at having been saved. My book has been proven many times worth its weight in gold to a multitude of families and other friends and Dinner Pianos. Judges, editors, clergymen and legions of others. Don't lose this notice, it may not appear again. Simply write Edward J. Woods, 356 Sixth Ave., N 208, New York, N. Y., and you will soon receive the FREE book of valuable information in plain wrapper, and happiness may soon be yours. Correspondence confidential.

MISS WILSON'S BRIDAL GOWN TO BE PLAIN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, it is learned, has overcome the objections voiced by her daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson, against any other than a perfectly plain white satin wedding gown.

A complete description of the gown, obtained by the AMERICAN, reveals the interesting fact that Mrs. Wilson looked with disfavor upon an entrimmed gown for so important an occasion.

The gown, which may be described as beautiful in its artistic simplicity, is embroidered down the front in white silk. The design, which is a conventional floral design, was the suggestion of Mrs. Wilson, which was agreed to by the bride-elect after she had seen the beautiful pattern outlined in a drawing submitted to her. It is said that Mrs. Wilson is highly pleased with this part of the wedding gown.

The gown is made of the finest quality of white charmeuse satin. The skirt part is draped slightly on either side in front, just enough to relieve it from a severe tightness of line. The neck of the gown is what might be called the medium low neck, usually affected by the bride-elect in all the gowns she now wears.

Beautiful white, filmy shadow lace almost completely covers the gown. The lace is draped from the shoulders. It is fitted in to the waist line, and falls in a draped cascade effect almost to the hem of the dress. This thin, beautiful lace gives the gown a wonderfully artistic appearance, and is draped on the skirt so that the beautiful embroidery design is enhanced rather than interfered with by this additional trimming.

The gown is made with a train nearly three yards in length. Over the whole costume will fall a handsome veil of white tulle.

This bridal gown, which has been completed save for a few finishing touches, is locked in a fireproof closet in the establishment of the K. E. Hanley Company, No. 147 Fifty-seventh street.

Only ten more days and the daughter of President Wilson becomes the bride of Francis B. Sayre at the White House. Wedding presents are arriving from all parts of the world. The Capitol is adjusting preparations for the wedding and Washington society and the diplomatic circles are vieing to pay homage to the bride-to-be.

Four colored family servants of the Wilsons, including "Mammy," Miss Jessie's nurse, are coming from the South to witness the ceremony. A large silver centrepiece, purchased by Chief Justice White, is to be the gift to the bride-to-be from the members of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Sayre has severed his connections with the office of District Attorney Whitman of New York to become secretary to the president of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

The circular adds that the organization will not uphold or protect any of its members who continually violate the rules of the company.

HEARD SPIRITS TALK ON PHONE WITH WOMAN

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 15.—State Detective James J. Mackey and R. J. Griffin, who arrested Mrs. Louisa Wyman, thirty-four, wife of a prominent local business man, declare they heard her conversing with "spirits" over the telephone.

This is believed to be the first instance on record, if true, of a spiritualist talking to the "other world" by wire.

Mrs. Wyman is accused of stating $1,200 from the safe of Jones Thyng, seventy-three, of Attleboro. It is claimed he gave her the combination to his safe on the advice of a Central Falls medium.

Mrs. Wyman was arrested by officers of the Massachusetts State police, on an indictment returned by the Grand Jury at Taunton against her and a woman from Central Falls, whose name has not yet appeared. She refused to go to Massachusetts and so was held on a fugitive-from-justice charge.

Thyng says he and the two women became friends at spiritualistic meetings. After their last visit to his home last August, he told the police, he missed the money from a vault in his house.

Mrs. Wyman pleaded not guilty to the fugitive-from-justice charge, and was released on bail of $2,000, furnished by a relative, for a hearing on November 20.

CLOSE EVIDENCE IN 'L' CASE; BANCROFT HEARD

The "L" Arbitration Board finished taking evidence today in Kingsley Hall, Ford Building. The counsels had been in session periodically since August 26.

Over 7,000 typewritten pages of evidence had been put in by the men's union and the Elevated Company. The printed exhibits submitted number 157.

When the evidence was all in Chairman James J. Storrow announced that the board would allow counsel for both sides until November 20 to submit written briefs. Chairman Storrow said that on the following week the board would again sit to hear oral arguments from counsel.

Bancroft on Stand.

That the Elevated would give its employes an increase in wages if the company had the money.

That the big strike had cost the Elevated practically $1,500,000.

That he did not think the annual sums, averaging between $50,000 to $80,000, paid to the big firm of Gaston, Snow & Saltonstall, exorbitant "in view of the services rendered."

That the $25,00 paid to J. Otis Wardwell annually by the Elevated was "merely a retainer."

That he agreed the car men ought to get a living wage if they "were willing to live economically."

That he didn't know what a "living wage" was and that the chief trouble was not the high cost of living nowadays, but the standard of living which some men demand.

That the Elevated ought to pay as official what his services were worth, whether his salary be $25,000 or $125,000.

What Is a Living Wage?

General Bancroft was on the stand for about an hour and a half. He was one of the most important witnesses called during the hearing.

Questioned by Attorney Feeney for the Car Men's Union, General Bancroft testified as follows:

Q—Are wage workers like motormen and conductors entitled to a living wage? A—I don't know what a living wage is. One motorman with a wife and four children testified here that he could live comfortably on his wages and that he saved $100 a year. Another motorman with a wife and four children testified here that he could not live on his wages. It is not a matter of the high cost of living, but the standard of living which some men demand.

Q—Will $2.60 a day buy as much meat today as it would in 1903? A—I don't know. I don't buy meat.

Q.—Well, now, granting that the cost of meat and of clothing and of groceries have gone up, do you think $2.60 today buy as much of these as it did in 1903? A.—Well, I suppose it can't.

Q.—Isn't it a fact that a wage of $2.60 a day now has a smaller purchasing power than in 1903? A.—I won't concede that.

Q. (By James H. Vahey of the arbitration committee)—Should your employes be granted an increase in wages? A.—We can't afford it.

Q.—Suppose we could give them an increase. If the men expect to share in the benefits of the fat year, they ought also to be willing to help bear the losses of the lean year.

Diamonds High, Too.

Q.—As a matter of fact, General, can a man buy now as much meat for $2.60 as he could in 1903? A.—No, and neither could he buy as many diamonds.

Q. (By Mr. Meeney, arising quickly and thumping the table)—Do the conductors and motormen in your employ get sufficient money, General, to buy diamonds? A.—I don't know. I don't suppose they do, but I was just using that as a figure of speech.

Q.—Don't you think the Elevated salaries are too high? A.—As official of a street railway should get what he is worth, whether it is $25,000 or $125,000 a year. We have had to let officials go in the past because we couldn't afford to give them what they were offered elsewhere.

Q.—Have you increased wages in proportion to your increase in salaries of officials? A.—I don't know, but I don't think that is pertinent. It is a fact, too, that we must deal with the employes as a class.

Q.—Do the directors of any other Massachusetts corporation save the Elevated get salaries? A.—Our directors haven't received compensation since January 1, 1912.

Q.—Does this mean that they can't draw their salaries any time? A.—No; but I assume that they don't.

Asks for Figures.

Q.—Will you agree that your employes ought to get a living wage? A.—Yes; provided they are willing to live economically.

Q. (By Chairman Storrow)—What proportion of the gross receipts of the Elevated are paid out in salaries? A.—I don't know.

Q.—How does this proportion compare to the similar proportions on other roads? A.—We made a partial investigation of this, but found we were given information confidentially which we could not divulge.

Q.—I want to know how high a proportion of gross receipts you are paying out for your management alone? A.—I haven't that information.

Henry B. Lyons, secretary of the Elevated, was the next witness. He receives $10,000 a year and admitted he gives only a part of his time—about two-thirds of each day—to the Elevated. He said his salary in 1910 was half what he receives now.

David E. Lonergan of Cambridge, testified that he is paid $3,600 a year by the Elevated to "hear evidence" under the Elevated, its service, management and so on. He does this by riding around on the cars, walking along the street, attending hearings. He reports the results to General Bancroft, he said.

Suspended Fire Commissioners Call for Detailed Answer.

FALL RIVER, Nov. 15.—Chairman Dominick S. Corrigan and Commissioner Alphonse Legendre of the Fire Commissioners, who were suspended by Mayor James H. Key for demanding the resignation of Fire Chief William C. Devol, today wrote to the Mayor that his action was arbitrary, his reasons unsubstantial and that he had failed to deny the commissioners' charges against the chief.

Edward L. Higginson, counsel for the suspended commissioners, said:

"The suspended members this morning sent a reply to the Mayor's letter, claiming that the city charter requires the Mayor to give other and substantial reasons for their suspension to the Board of Aldermen within forty-eight hours and that, upon his failure to do so, the act of suspension will be void."

SAME OLD RULE HAMPERS B. & M. SAYS PROUTY

Interstate Commerce Commissioner Prouty says the chief trouble with the Boston & Maine Railroad is "that its directorate continues in control of the same crowd that has been responsible for past mismanagement." But he does not look for a receivership.

Regarding the road's request to get financial relief through boosting rates, the commissioner said that, while the road will be allowed some increases, it will not be permitted to raise its income "anything like" the $5,000,000 which he says is needed.

The commissioner has not been able to learn yet just what truth there is in accusations of traffic diversions. This will be probed.

"In any event," said the commissioner, "I think the Boston & Maine and the New Haven's traffic departments should be separated."

In regard to the report of his coming retirement from the commission, he said that he will head the pending physical valuation of the road which the commission is to take up.

Commissioner Prouty's statement was as follows:

I hope Boston & Maine will not go into receivership, and I guess it won't. A chief trouble in its situation is that its directorate continues in control of the same crowd that has been responsible for past mismanagement.

While some of its finances have been found in good shape, others have not. It is a pretty poor time to sell subsidiaries' stock purchased in recent years, but if it comes to doing this or exacting any such toll from the public as the road proposes, the former should be done.

There will also be an inquiry made as to whether the Boston & Maine should cancel any of its leases.

Ship in Explosion at Sea Docks Here

The British steam collier, Kendal Castle, Captain E. R. Howe, from Louisburg, Cape Breton, with 6,200 tons of sack coal, docked at the Everett gas works today, after a thrilling experience 100 miles at sea.

"The seas were running high and I had just gone below to take a nap after being on deck forty-eight hours," said Captain Howe. "When an explosion shook the ship. Six covers of the after hatch, each weighing one ton, were thrown clear of the hatch combing.

"The twenty-six coolies in the crew ran about chattering excitedly. I ordered the life boats swung out, although it was doubtful if they could have been launched in the wild seas. Although the hull was fractured, no leak could be found nor were there signs of fire."

Mrs. Day Drops Dead in Street

INSURGENTS TO CARRY GRANGE WAR TO FLOOR

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 15.—The insurgent element in the National Grange will have to fight out its contentions on the floor of the convention, as embodied in resolutions denouncing former State Master George T. Ladd of Massachusetts for political activity in Pennsylvania and upholding the cause of George P. Hampton of New York, legislative agent in Washington for the Progressive Grange. He not only demands reinstatement in the sixth degree, but also seeks reimbursement for the expense he underwent in fighting the National Grange in its endeavor to expel him from a subordinate New York grange.

It was pointed out today that the committee on resolution, which has the insurgents' demands under consideration, is made up almost entirely of men and women who uphold the cause of National Master Oliver Wilson of Illinois. It comprises T. C. Atkeson of West Virginia, C. A. Stetson of Maine, J. Arthur Greenwood, Mrs. Pauline S. Kaine, Mrs. T. S. Denny and Mrs. Anna A. Gunzi.

Stetson is claimed by both the standpatters and the insurgents. He is chairman of the national executive committee. Charges are made that he has gone back on the insurgents thus far while here, although the Maine State Grange, of which he is master, is looked upon as insurgent. The insurgents declare his attitude shows he is an insurgent while in Maine, but that he is a "Machine Man" at a national convention.

Edwin D. Mead of Boston and Congressman Hatfield of Ohio will speak here tonight. A memorial service will be held in Convention Hall tomorrow afternoon.

Rabbi Wise Favors the Minimum Wage

Names Three Great Enemies to Home Life in Ford Hall Address.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York, in an address before the School Voters' League at Ford Hall, on the "Outlook of the Family," declared in favor of a minimum wage as against the "Family" wage.

"The three great enemies to home life today are," he said, "first, the new commercialism that calls for a family wage or wage of the whole family; second, life in the great cities; third, immense personal wealth and abject poverty. Socialism is also directly, openly and fearlessly, attacking the family institution."

"Last Saturday I pawned my wedding ring."

Mrs. Jameson sold it to buy food for her two babies.

She is a frail bit of a woman, twenty-eight years old, who has been ill a great deal. She says that her husband has been sick much of the time, as well, and that he has been out of work.

At the Jameson home at No. 28 Boylston street, Brookline, the children are crying for their father. The latter is in the Tombs for lack of bail, awaiting a continued hearing Tuesday in Roxbury District Court.

The despairing wife's story today was as follows:

Pursued by Hard Luck.

"I came from Belfast, Ireland, about seven years ago. My husband comes from England. We have two children, Edward is four, and Sidney, Jr., is one and one-half.

"We have been living in Brookline for the past four years. My husband is a janitor. Two years ago he had a bad accident. He fell down an elevator shaft in the cellar. His right arm was broken and his head was hurt. He has to wear a silver plate on his arm now. He was ill a long time.

"Several months ago, while he was walking along Neponset bridge, he was stricken with appendicitis. He was sent to a hospital and there was another long lay-off for him.

"I have been sick a good deal and was sick then, but I went out to work, leaving the babies in a day nursery. Ever since then I have worked out two or three days a week. But I am not strong. I have fainted several times and been obliged to quit work.

"Edward, our oldest child, was hurt in a car accident. I got $20 from the Elevated for him. I had to use it to pay the back rent and to buy oilcloth to put on the kitchen so it would be warmer for the children.

"Last Saturday night I had to pawn my wedding ring to get food for the children.

Arrested in Pawnshop.

"I cannot believe that my husband has done what the police say. He was not that sort of a man. He had no greed for money. He would give anyone the shirt off his back for the asking. He got a good wife and a good husband and he thought a great deal of his home."

The police say that Jameson has confessed numerous robberies in Brookline, also that he threw down the waste pipe at his home where he did not dare to pawn for fear he would be arrested.

He was arrested in a South End pawnshop, where the suspicious proprietor called the police secretly, while Jameson was offering gems for sale.

Burglars Try New Break at Wirth's

Surprised at Work in Restaurant and Get Away.

Burglars broke into Charles Wirth's restaurant, 1 Bowdoin square today for the second time within a few months, and made a desperate attempt to rifle the big safe. They were surprised at work and escaped, leaving behind them a new set of burglar's tools.

Bartender William Hatch, who arrived at 5:30 this morning, discovered the burglary and notified the police. A squad was rushed to the restaurant.

The burglars or burglars had entered through a small window on Hersey place that opened into the stock room where the wine, beer and liquor is kept. From there they made their way to the downstairs office in which stood the safe which was rifled at the other robbery. They tried to break in this door, but succeeded only in splintering a panel.

Upstairs, they broke open the telephone cash box, but got little there as they had been emptied yesterday. They took a dollar's worth of stamps from the cash register.

EVELYN'S LOVE STORY

"As a brother to his sister."—"Much Ado About Nothing."

CHAPTER LXXII.

Alice, Countess of Yarmouth, arrived in New York on Friday, January 18, three days before the day set for Harry's trial to begin. She was met at the dock by her mother, Mrs. William Thaw.

The mother took the countess direct to the Hotel Lorraine, where the Thaw family had its headquarters for the trial. There the countess and Evelyn met for the first time.

The countess saw a winsome, attractive girl, and Evelyn beheld a young woman very attractive, also. The two may have been out of sympathy with each other on many points, but they had common cause for sorrow in their marriages and in the predicament into which their brother and husband had fallen.

Reporters flocked to the Lorraine, but the countess would not be seen. However, she sent her brother Edward out to make the following statement for her:

I have crossed the ocean to give every aid in my power to my brother when he faces trial next week and to assist at all the counsel conferences. It was not at all true, as has been reported, that I would not really get under way, Monday, the 21st, but would merely be called and then put over until Wednesday.

Another case was being dished, that of the Mathew Hilgert of "magic boots" fame that must be gotten before the case of "The People vs. Harry Thaw" could be called.

The new arrangements provided that, on Monday morning, Harry must be brought before Justice John J. Fitzgerald of the Supreme Court to plead.

The 200 talesmen of the special panel summoned to provide the Thaw jury would have to be there, free to flee with the defendant. The roll of talesmen must be called in the defendant's presence. That having been done the case could be put over until Wednesday.

But the Monday date meant one thing at least—that Harry would be taken from the Tombs, across the "Bridge of Sighs" and into the Criminal Court building for the first time since his arraignment seven months before.

To Be Continued.

Alice Makes Statement.

Alice, Countess of Yarmouth, made the following statement for herself:

I have crossed the ocean to give every aid in my power to my brother when he faces trial next week and to assist at all the counsel conferences. It was not at all true, as has been reported, that I would not really get under way, Monday, the 21st, but would merely be called and then put over until Wednesday.

Old Story to Evelyn.

Harry had been notified of his sister's arrival and was eager to see her. He was standing up at the door of his cell as his sister, wife and mother were escorted down the corridor of the "Row." Harry called to the countess, who ran forward eagerly to greet him.

At the cell door the brother and sister kissed through the bars and even embraced as best they could. The countess' greeting was as warm and loving as possible. Tears sprang to her eyes, tears of sisterly sympathy for her unfortunate brother, who had been in so much trouble all his life and who had finally enmeshed himself in the most serious difficulty of all.

Evelyn, the mother and the countess stayed as long as the regulations for visitors allowed. When they left they returned to the matron's room, where they were again searched. It was noticed that all had been empty.

Then the three women sadly returned to the Lorraine, to await Monday and the beginning of the trial.

That day it became known that Harry's trial would not really get under way, Monday, the 21st, but would merely be called and then put over until Wednesday.

Another case was being dished, that of the Mathew Hilgert of "magic boots" fame that must be gotten before the case of "The People vs. Harry Thaw" could be called.

The new arrangements provided that, on Monday morning, Harry must be brought before Justice John J. Fitzgerald of the Supreme Court to plead.

The 200 talesmen of the special panel summoned to provide the Thaw jury would have to be there, free to flee with the defendant. The roll of talesmen must be called in the defendant's presence. That having been done the case could be put over until Wednesday.

But the Monday date meant one thing at least—that Harry would be taken from the Tombs, across the "Bridge of Sighs" and into the Criminal Court building for the first time since his arraignment seven months before.

To Be Continued.

All Worked for Harry.

You may say for my sister that she comes here to show that we will all work for Harry and that we will have his interests at heart. My brother's case is at present at such a stage that there are not many things that it would do to talk about.

But the members of the family has advised Harry to go against the wishes of his counsel. There are other features of this case that are of vital importance and they have not even been told to me. I am in ignorance of much that is material, but these things are of such great importance that they have not yet been brought out publicly and they will not be until the trial.

That evening there was a long family talk at the Lorraine between the mother, the daughter and the daughter-in-law. The countess had to be told of the latest developments in the case, of the plans for the defence and of the immediate approach of the trial.

What despairing comments the three women may have made to one another over the blow which had fallen on the family will never be known. It was a trio of women hard to duplicate for sad experiences in life.

There was the white-haired mother, the earnest, religious matron, possessor of millions, a woman of quiet tastes, whose declining years were wrapped in one sorrow after another.

Tasting Bitter Fruits.

Her daughter was tasting the bitter fruits of the typical marriage of wealth and title. Though her husband held one of the proudest titles in England, the young wife was beginning to regret terribly her ill-advised union.

Evelyn's spectacular history was already known. Her sorrows were to be greater even than they were then.

Over all three, mother, sister and wife, loomed the case, the additional shadow of Harry's assassination of White. And they were not on the eve of Harry's trial, to sustain and comfort one another for the coming ordeal.

The next day was Sunday. The countess was taken to the Tombs to see her imprisoned brother.

Mrs. William Thaw and Evelyn accompanied her. The countess was dressed in black. She was quite. She presented hardly the popular picture of a lady of rank.

At the Tombs the countess was searched by the matron, just as Evelyn and the mother were searched every time they went to see Harry. This was a new experience for the countess. It placed her, as a woman of her social position, wife of a belted Earl, should be fingered over by a prison warden in the way the matron was no help for it.

The Tombs matron and her assistants have searched thousands and thousands of women callers at their famous institution. But few are the women of title who come under their deft hands. The countess bore the process patiently and soon was ready, with her mother and Evelyn, to be taken up to "Murderers' Row" to see her brother.

These prison processes had become an old story to Evelyn and the mother. But they were all new to the countess. On account of her position in England she received extreme deference from ordinary people. To return to America and find herself subjected to stern prison regulations, like searching, prison passes, barred cells and so on was all the greater shock to Harry's sister.

Old Story to Evelyn.

Harry had been notified of his sister's arrival and was eager to see her. He was standing up at the door of his cell as his sister, wife and mother were escorted down the corridor of the "Row." Harry called to the countess, who ran forward eagerly to greet him.

CHANDLER NOW SCORES THAW'S EXTRADITION

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 15.—Former United States Senator W. E. Chandler, who has hitherto urged the extradition of Harry K. Thaw, today went on record as opposed to it.

"In every lunatic who escapes from an insane asylum a criminal merely because he runs away, so that the Governor of the State to which he runs must send him back, branded as a criminal, to the Governor of the State from which he flees?" asked Chandler. He continued:

"The Constitution of the United States says that a person charged with treason, felony or other crimes, must be sent back. But how can an adjudged lunatic be made a traitor, felon or other criminal?"

Chandler scores Governor Felker and Attorney-General Tuttle for allowing extradition, as well as W. T. Jerome and the State of New York for asking it.

"The idea is absurd and intolerable," he continued. "How cannot he made a new criminal for running away while an adjudged lunatic, with the original judgment asserting his lunacy unreversed.

"And if Governor Felker's attempt to send him back to New York on this ground becomes operative, a most dangerous precedent will have been established."

He characterized Jerome's statement that New Hampshire must not inquire into the motives back of asking for the requisition as "preposterous."

Through Attorney Merrill Sturtleef, former Dartmouth football tackle and baseball pitcher, Taaw was introduced last night to the members of the Dartmouth, '17, football squad, on their way to play at Manchester today. The boys sang for Thaw, "When the Backs Go Tearing By" and "Old Dartmouth."

Dr. Young Pleads for New Sex Code

Says Education in Practical Eugenics Will Reduce Social Evil.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—"Boys should be taught a new sex code through education in practical eugenics," declared Dr. Evangeline W. Young of the Boston School of Eugenics at today's session of the American Association for Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality.

"Boys, like girls, must be taught the spiritual significance of marriage and the sacredness of the family as an institution of society. Boys must be taught the falseness of the double standard of morals. Such education will avail more than all legislation in ridding society of the curse of the social evil."

FEVER PATIENT ON "L" TRAIN; BOARD PROBES

The Boston Board of Health today began a rigid investigation into the case of Morris Kaplan, a six-year-old Sharon boy, who was brought by train from Sharon and to the Boston City Hospital on an elevated train while suffering from malignant scarlet fever.

The boy was removed by this method upon the advice of Dr. Candace F. Dole, a member of the Sharon Board of Health. Dr. Dole says he advised the child's parents to take him in the baggage car because there was no passenger coach at that time. He did not advise the use of an ambulance because he did not think the parents could afford it. The child died at the hospital November 8.

Carrying the boy in a train is in defiance of the State health laws and action may be taken against Dr. Dole and the boy's father. The action of the Boston board follows the report of Dr. Thomas B. Sise, chief medical inspector.

Dr. Sise reported that he found Dr. Dole had visited the Kaplan child twice and after diagnosing the case as one of scarlet fever, advised the mother to take the child to Boston on one of the regular passenger trains.

"This is not the first case, but probably the most flagrant case that has come to the attention of the health authorities," said Dr. Sise. "I intend to prevent other cases similar in character from arising, this board insists and demands that the law should be obeyed."

The King is in many respects a model landlord, both as regards the question of wages and the provision of proper housing accommodation.

Candelabra Upset Causes $40,000 Fire

A loss of $40,000 was caused, it was estimated today by the fire which swept the Rogers Building in Beverly, damaging four stores and many offices. STUART'S PLAPAO-PADS FOR RUPTURE
If you have a rupture, stop it, you have only to write for a free trial of Stuart's Plapao-Pads and a false one against it. Nature, assisted by Stuart's Plapao-Pads, will then do the rest. Don't continue to wear it! Here is a truss that is different, being entirely self-adjusting and self-adhesive, so that it cannot slip, and consequently cannot chafe or press against the pubic bone. No straps, buckles or springs attached. Thousands have treated themselves in the privacy of the home and report great obstacle cases cured—no delay from work. Soft as velvet—easy to apply—inexpensive. Process of recovery is natural, so afterwards no use for trusses. Awarded Gold Medal, International Exposition, Rome. Grand Prix, Paris. Bitten by Tomcat, Sues for $10,000

John O'Donnell Says He Lost Battle with Belligerent Animal.

A big tomcat, who made his headquarters in the building at No. 161 Tremont street, and bit a hole in the leg of John O'Donnell, has brought upon George N. Black, the owner of the building, a suit for damages to the extent of $10,000.

The cat is known as some fighter. On the day when he routed O'Donnell, he had polished off another cat, and was flushed with victory. Upon seeing O'Donnell, it is claimed, he sailed forth and did battle. O'Donnell, bitten in the leg, hurried away to a doctor, and the suit is the result.

HEAR WARNKE AS 'CELLIST AT SYMPHONY HALL

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Denor Muck offered the unfinished symphony of Schubert and the pastoral symphony of Beethoven at the Symphony rehearsal, with Heinrich Warnke, the 'cellist of the orchestra, as soloist. He elected to play the Haydn Concerto in D major for violincello.

It is a remarkable thing that a classical composition like the Schubert Symphony, a work that was lost for forty years, should today be the most popular of the orchestral compositions of that brilliant and unfortunate musician, who died at the age of thirty-one.

While it may not possess the grandeur of the celebrated C Symphony, its exquisite melody and the lightness of its instrumentation make it far more potent to the average concert goer.

The performance yesterday was truly memorable. Never did the orchestra sing the andante more beautifully. The prolonged applause was a fitting tribute to Dector Muck and his men.

The patent symphony, too, was delightfully performed. Its gushing streams of happiness and content were most faithfully portrayed.

The violincello is a valuable instrument, and for a few minutes it can be greatly admired as a solo instrument. A cello concerto is something to be endured under the best circumstances. Warnke seemed to be playing under unfavorable conditions yesterday. He did not succeed in making the concerto of Haydn interesting, perhaps an impossible task, and he did not always draw tone from his instrument that were good to hear. Doubtless his performance tonight will be admirable, for he is a great musician and usually a very satisfactory soloist.

TIGERS 10-9 FAVORITE OVER YALE ELEVEN

Yale men rallied to the support of their team and the betting was 10 to 9 at noon with the Tigers favorites.

Yale backers, on the other hand, show a renewed confidence in the Blue team, which appears justified from her work against Brown. The team has "come back," they say, with the inevitable late-season improvement which always characterizes the Yale team and which is one factor which has made it the great team it is.

There is another element which may enter into the result of the game. Princeton is rather uncertain as to just how much damage the Harvard game inflicted on the eleven. The game was by no means an easy one, and the fear that the team may have slowed up to some extent has worried the coaches.

Whatever the result of the game, neither the Yale nor the Princeton team can lay claim to being a truly "great" eleven, an eleven that would go down in history. Princeton beaten in two important games, Yale in wretched condition throughout the preliminary season—both are black marks against the records of the colleges.

With the Dartmouth game cut from the Harvard schedule, on grounds that Harvard cannot "afford" to play the Green before the Yale game, and with this game superseded by the Brown battle, the ticket sale for today's contest has been the greatest of the season.

Had a closer contest been expected, the advance would have approached the records made by the Crimson-Green contest in years when Yale was on the schedule away from the Stadium.

Good Thing for Crimson.

Brown has been beaten three times—by Colby, by Pennsylvania and last Saturday by Yale. The Bear has scored seventy points to its opponents' sixty-one. Harvard is still unbeaten, and has run up 178 points, against its opponents' sixteen.

The offering of any over-confidence in the team following the poor showing made against the Tigers was not a good thing for the Crimson. This is the first time that the team is seen by "outsiders" since the shake-up which followed that game. It is the first real opportunity, too, to get a real line on the offence which will be opened up against Yale a week from today.

Logan, the first string quarter, has gone to New Haven and his place will be filled by Freedley today. He is a competent man, and will be watched carefully by the coaches today, with the idea of running him in the greatest game of the year. His work of the preliminary season has appeared to make the coaches confident in his ability at least justifiable.

Captain Storer is back at tackle and his former position at right end will be filled by Hardwick, playing as a regular end for the first time.

Team in Good Shape.

Not a man came out of the Princeton game with a serious injury, and early today the team was reported to be in better shape than at any time this season.

For Brown the regular lineup will in all probability be used. There is some doubt, however, about right end, for which either McBee or McLaughlin may be slated. It is also a question whether Gardiner or Brown will run the team at quarterback. Andrews, too, may be selected for fullback instead of Fraser.

The last workout held by Brown was confined chiefly to signal practice and drop kicking by Captain Henry. In practice the captain made some wonderful punts, many of them going well over fifty yards, but, punts on a clear field and punts on a field littered with Harvard giants are two different things.

It is the belief that Brown hasn't a chance. From all appearances the Harvard machine, without urging and without extending itself, should roll up a score. The Crimson, however, will play safe, and with a fair lead, will take its first string men from the field to save them for the real fight next week.

BETTING ODDS SHIFT TO 10-9 AT NEW HAVEN

By FRANK G. MENKE.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 15.—Something like 31,000 persons from all sections of these United States arrived in this community today to watch the Yale bulldogs and Princeton tigers bite, scratch and maul each other in an effort o settle the annual question of football supremacy.

The weather and the betting favored Princeton. The day dawned clear, cold and crisp, with the sun industriously trying to chase away any excessive chilliness. The field was dry and fast—just to the liking of the gang from the seat of learning that Woodrow Wilson, Big Bill Edwards, Sammy White and the Poe boys assisted in making famous.

The betting opened soon after sunrise with Princeton the long end, 10 to 8. These odds appealed to the "old grads" of Yale in the nature of an insult to their beloved alma mater. Whereupon immediately after changing from budoir to street clothes they plunged into the betting institutions with large rolls of money on their persons and at once proceeded to wave in the genera direction of all those persons who had an idea that the Tigers would win.

This sudden onslaught of Yale money quickly weakened the confidence of the Princeton outfit, and the odds jumped quickly to 10 to 7 and then 10 to 8 and finally to 10 to 9. At the high point the Princeton money began to disappear.

At the high point the Princeton money began to disappear, and it seemed a certainty that when the teams went in to battle the betting would be at even money.

This was harvest time for the New Haven hotels, restaurants and storekeepers. And they made a rich harvest. They greeted the record mob such as the same to that Al Jennings and his gang used to greet trains that carried heavy consignments of gold. The hotel keepers boosted their room prices higher than any featherbed ever boosted a pigskin.

The restaurants trotted out special menus that reminded old timers of war time day. Even the old standbys pork an', beef stew which beget only fifteen cents per portion on such days of the New Haven year command double and treble prices today.

Brown Game Will Test New Harvard Lineup

Should Decide Whether the Change Has Accomplished the Desired Results.

By SYDE LYNES.

While the attention of the football world is probably focused today on the big battle between the Bulldog and the Tiger on Yale Field, Harvard is playing a very important game in the Stadium with Brown University. Important because it will test out in a pretty thorough manner a revised order in the Harvard team and decide whether the change from the way in which the men lined up against Princeton has accomplished the desired results of greater power, more team work and increased efficiency in every way.

Not only does Harvard enter the Brown contest with an order that has been changed since this week, but with one that has been altered between the hours of gun-down and sun-up, with Gilman playing at left tackle and Hitchcock going to left guard, a very questionable move.

Logan, the quarterback, will not be seen in action today, as he journeyed to New Haven, along with Head Coach Haughton, Centre Rush Trumbull and "Bob" Fisher, former Harvard captain, to lurk about the Yale camp in disguise, or even, perhaps, disgust, should the outcome be very unusual, and get a few pointers which may aid the little Crimson general in strangling the Bulldog next Saturday into perpetual silence.

Freedley to Play Quarter.

Freedley will run the eleven today, and there is no reason to believe that his work will be anything but satisfactory, as there has been but little to choose between the two leading candidates for quarter at Harvard this year.

Brown also enters the game with a lineup that has been changed with lightning rapidity throughout the season, in a futile attempt thus far to attain perfection. Judging from the season the Providence team has had, the visiting team today is far from up to the standard of Brown elevens in recent years, and while Harvard will have to play a first-class game to get away with the contest, there is little reason to scent anything but victory in the wind for the Crimson machine.

Thus far this year Brown has been beaten by Pennsylvania and Yale, to say nothing of such mammoth elevens as Colby in the opening tussle at Providence. The invaders today, however, have reshed somewhat, and for the past week have been working hard on a forward pass formation which is calculated to make Harvard keep on the jump, if not sufficiently tricky to result in a score.

Captain Henry of the visitors is somewhat skilled in drop kicking and boosting the ball between the uprights from placement, but Harvard is going to use every strategy to keep the Brunonians out of striking distance today if possible, to prevent Henry showing his ability along those lines.

Brown Line Outclassed.

Although both teams have been shaken up recently, bringing the power of attack to a quantity more or less akin to X in its known value, Harvard's line material and the showing of the forwards to this date has been such as to warrant us in the conclusion that the Brown line is slightly outclassed, except for such men as Bartlett and Captain Henry, both of whom may be looked to for hard and skilled playing.

We do not presume to question the wisdom of putting Hitchcock at guard in place of Gilman, although it may have been done to strengthen Lee tackle position against Bartlett, who is always a dangerous man. There seems to be little reason to suppose that the Crimson drew order as a whole getting its first real test today, should not reflect in a very satisfactory manner on the wisdom of the move in general.

Brown, as well as Harvard, has found a good deal of trouble this year in trying to discover a man who can do consistent work in the punting line, and to this date has not solved the problem in a very satisfactory manner. Benn, who has borne the burden of this work, will doubtless run up to Madam, who is slated to kick for Harvard today, while there is no one on the Providence eleven who is in a class with Brickley in drop and placement kicking.

Harvard Slightly Heavier.

Harvard is slightly heavier than Brown, both along the line and in the backfield, while the Crimson is decidedly superior, at least on paper, at the end of the line, the right wing having been materially strengthened by placing Hardwick there. It will be interesting to note how the former Crimson halfback handles himself today in his new position, for he is a clever handler of the forward pass and a fast man downfield.

With a dry field and an improved interference, for such is said to have resulted during the week's practice, Mahan and Brickley may be looked to for some brilliant running, the former particularly shining on end runs when he has a firm footing and is offered the merest shadow of interference if it forms quickly for him.

In addition to the absence of Logan, the Crimson is also without the services of the regular center, Trumbull, while Trumbull is not showing a game so much better than Soucy, he has the advantage of greater weight, and is, therefore, a more valuable man. Considering then that Harvard is playing without two regulars and in an order that is strange to the men, the Crimson in entering what is really a big game, is somewhat handicapped. To defeat Brown by the score made by Yale last week, will be satisfactory in every respect, and it is doubtful whether Harvard can do better than this today.

DARTMOUTH AND LANGFORD MADE CARLISLE READY 2-1 FAVORITE FOR STRUGGLE OVER 'GUNBOAT'

By JACK CONWAY.

SAM LANGFORD has been made a 2 to 1 favorite over "Gunboat" Smith for their twelve-round bout which will be staged at the Atlas A. A. next Monday evening. The men who risk part of their earnings on ring contests believe that the Tar Baby's experience and punching ability will enable him to outspar the white heavyweight champion.

There are a number of "fans" who will back the winner to win. They believe that he has an excellent chance to stop the Cambridge negro with one of his terrific right hand punches.

The writer thinks Langford will finish in front, but there is, of course, a possibility that "Gunboat" may surprise us. Sam has been fighting for over a decade and is bound to be defeated sooner or later. And Smith may be the young man to turn the trick.

Langford is finishing his training at North Reading. He has not been forced to do a lot of hard work, as he is still at least ten pounds over his best fighting weight. If Langford were as good as he was two years ago, there would not be the least doubt about the defeat of Smith. He would probably stop the Californian in three or four rounds.

But as Langford is not in the condition he was two years ago, there is a little uncertainty about the result of Monday's bout. On paper Sam should win, but boxing matches are almost as hard to "dope" out as baseball games between evenly matched teams.

The question of who will referee the bout has not yet been settled, but it is believed that the managers of the rival boxers and the club officials will reach an agreement today.

Penn. State Ready for Duel with Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 14.—The football squad of Pennsylvania state is ready for today's game with Indianapolis. The visitors will make a desperate effort to redeem a rather unsuccessful season by giving the Navy a hard game. Two years ago the teams played to a scoreless tie, and there was no game last year.

A probable arrangement at the start will be Mitchell, quarterback; Falling and Blodgett, halfbacks; Harrison, fullback. Nichols will play quarter during most of the game.

B. C. High Eleven Meets Dorchester

Boston College High will line up against Dorchester High today at Dunbar avenue. The latter street boys have been practicing hard all week and have made noticeable improvement in their work. The eleven plays better together than it has before this year and will surely put up a better battle than was shown against Allen School last Saturday.

Dartmouth Made 10 to 6 Favorite

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Bets aggregating $800 at even money have been placed at Schumm's that Princeton will score twelve points today, and $500 even that Yale will not make a touchdown. Dartmouth was favored over the Indians at 10 to 6, and Harvard 2 to 1 over Yale.

SUBURBAN BOYS IN BIG SCHOOL GAMES OF DAY

Two Suburban League games and two school football schedule today in the matter of importance. Everett, the leader of this league, will be opposed by Medford in its home grounds, while Somerville High will go against Malden at Malden. Dorchester High and Boston College High are the only local teams scheduled to play. They will meet at the latter's home grounds, Dorchester.

Everett should have no fear of trouble from Medford. Coach O'Donnell's boys have yet to meet a serious rival, won and have defeated many of the best teams in the State.

The Somerville-Malden game will undoubtedly be hard fought. The former appear evenly matched. Somerville may be a better showing against Waltham next Saturday, but the game was played under more favorable conditions.

The star Waltham High team will play its annual game in Portland today against the schoolboys of that city. Portland generally gives Waltham a fast team and a hard battle, but the strong showing of Waltham this year has made it a topheavy favorite.

Seeking a Husband

By CONSTANCE CLARKE

I HAVE met him. He's a doctor and I know he's the right one, principally because he's so different from Dick.

The first time I looked at him I really didn't see anything at all out of the ordinary. In fact, lots of the boys I know are better looking. But suddenly like a bolt from Heaven (I think that's really a very good simile) my feelings changed toward him and I realized what a dear he is.

And now for the way it happened. I had always been anxious to see a hospital, and I never seem to be ill myself or have any friends that I can go and visit. Some day I think I'll be a nurse, only I should hate to look so much like everyone else. Well, to go on with my story, one day when we were out in the machine we passed the hospital just as our doctor was going in.

Lucky thing, I thought, seriously, and then I called out just in fun: "Take me?"

"Sure thing," he responded, "come right along," and before mother knew what was happening I was out of the machine and flying up the stairs after the doctor.

A NICE PLACE

Such a nice medicine smelling place, and so many nurses flying around and one looking just the same as another. Suddenly someone came down the stairs three at a time and I looked up and realized that this someone was being introduced to me as Dr. Hammond. I looked at him rather indifferently, and wondered if all internes wore white. He looked exactly like the owner of the good ship Nancy Bell or something like that, but it was most becoming to him.

However, he didn't pay much attention to me, and I pricked up my ears when I heard him say: "Yes, he's all ready for you; spent a pretty good night. Will you go right up?" Then they both looked at me, and I laughed. I always laugh when I don't know what else to do.

"Peggy, I'm afraid you'll have to wait for me down here," said the doctor; "something unexpected has happened, and I'm needed upstairs." Then there was some conversation between the doctors, and then the doctor turned to me again. "But Dr. Hammond will show you around. By that time I'll be ready to take you home."

Dr. Hammond did not seem at all thrilled at the idea. He was most indifferent—or shall I say professional?—and it was on the tip of my tongue to refuse to go, but I did want to see the hospital. So we started, and it was such fun. I peeked into the wards, and, in fact, made myself so very fascinating that I didn't see how any one could be cold and distant, even a house physician, who has lots to think about, I suppose.

"I've always wanted to be a nurse," I declared, rather at a loss for something to say.

"Oh, have you?" he said curtly. "Perhaps you have only been impressed with the picturesque side of it. You know nurses work hard, and their days are filled with waiting on other people. Now you spend hours at a time, probably, with a good book and a box of candy, or perhaps playing bridge."

"That isn't so," I returned, indignantly, furious that he thought me one of those idle society girls. I might have remembered the hours I did spend in just that way. "Why, I'm busy most of the day myself, and I very seldom eat candy." That's a lie, because I adore it.

"Indeed!" he rejoined. "What do you do?"

I was dying to tell of all the things I was interested in, but I decided that it was none of his business anyway, and I hated his air of polite interest. Besides, we had made quite a thorough tour of inspection by now, and I was tired of having the nurses make remarks about my velvet tam and stunning sport coat. So I said, coldly: "It can't be of very much interest to you, and I really mustn't keep you any longer. I can wait for the doctor right here. Please don't wait."

HE WANTED TO

"Oh, but I want to wait; you haven't told me anything about what you do, and I want to know very much. You see there are so few girls of today who do anything if they don't have to."

"Oh, but that isn't so, really; you mustn't think that way of us all. Why there are plenty of worth while girls in the world, and—and"—my voice trailed off, for there stood the doctor waiting to take me home, and I—well, I wasn't a bit ready to go. I don't think Dr. Hammond was ready to have me go either, for he looked just like a big cross boy.

As we walked out of the room the doctor went on ahead, and Dr. Hammond looked at me very closely. "To be continued in our next," he said, quite seriously. "When?"

"Why, any time," I answered, trying not to look surprised. And so he is coming down Wednesday. I put on my sport coat this morning, and it had such a dear funny medicine smell. It must be great fun to be a nurse—in some hospitals.

How to Grow Long Beautiful Hair

By a Hair Specialist.

It is not hard to stop the hair from falling out and promote its growth if the right means are used. There is no hope for the scalp where the hair roots are dead and glossy. This is shiny. However, to those who have not reached this condition, immediate steps should be taken to stop it before it is too late. Here is a simple recipe which you can make at home, that will stop the hair from falling out, promote its growth and eradicate scalp eruptions and dandruff sores. I know of cases where the hair has grown from four to five inches in a few months after using this simple recipe: To a half pint of water add 1 oz. bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ oz. of glycerine, and apply to the hair, rubbing with the finger tips, two or three times a week. These ingredients can be obtained at any drug store at very little cost and mixed at home. This recipe not only promotes the growth of the hair but darkens streaked, faded gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. Adv.

Furs as an Aid to Beauty

Some Novel Hints by Beautiful Martha Hedman

In the Evening

By MAUDE MILLER

"I WANT to talk to you about what I have discovered on my own self concerning dress," said Miss Martha Hedman. "The dress of the very young girl is so important, for a young girl is like a flower, and should be studied from every viewpoint so that her garments are a part of her, just as the perfume of a rose is peculiar only to itself, or the color of a violet is like no other flower that grows.

"I have studied my own type and I have found that there is nothing in the world so charming for the young girl of today as fur combinations. In the first place, furs are a great addition to the ordinary street costume. Fur in itself accentuates all the youthful contours of a pretty face, softens the outlines and brings out the color. And so, fur garments, or fur pieces and muffs, should be worn as much as possible. I wear fur constantly myself, but I have found that fur must be chosen very carefully, lest it have an undesirable effect. Of course, every one knows that dark, rich furs are becoming to blonde girls. I have always worn dark furs, but I have only lately discovered that a peculiar shade of golden yellow shading down to brown is far more effective in every way with a blonde type.

"White fur is very hard to wear, and should be attempted only by the very youthful person with a very clear skin. A dark girl should wear warm, rich fur, but never a one-toned brown, because there is not enough contrast between the fur and her complexion, and she is apt to look sallow.

The Effect of Furs

"Lace is another one of my hobbies, also lace and fur combinations. But the girl who wears lace should have it good and well chosen even though in very small quantities. I believe in being extravagant with lace myself, for good lace can always be utilized, and there is nothing in the world half so fetching. Lace and fur are lovely together. There is something in the fragility of the lace when combined with the heavier fur which makes any garment positively irresistible. Fur and tulle or fur and chiffon combinations give this effect.

"Then there are the fur and color combinations that are most interesting to study. The wonderful effect of mink combined with coral, of lynx with ivory white, of ermine with coral purple, of of bouzey with gobelin blue. Oh, the idea is fascinating, I assure you, and if a person has the time, and is not afraid of being too extravagant, the most ravishing costumes in the world can be devised with the aid of fur.

"One thing I must advise the young girl to omit from her costume, is jewelry. I cannot see what possible attraction jewelry could add to the costume of a young girl. It nearly always looks tawdry, even if good and well chosen. And at best it adds but a fussy, overdressed look to the otherwise perfectly go-wned young girl.

"Try the use of fur and fur combinations in your dress. This seems to be a time when fur is used to a great extent anyway, so that fur of any kind ought really to be within the reach of any one who desires it. And get in the habit of acquiring good lace and using it effectively in your costumes. I should like every one to know what a really great acquisition it is to the smart woman's toilette. If you begin the use of fur and lace you will get so that you never think a costume complete without either one or the other. You will get to be a connoisseur in both after a while and you will be the most attractively gowned woman anywhere around. Just try it and see."

THE FAMILY CUPBOARD

A Thrilling Story of High Society Life in New York

Adapted from the Big Dramatic Success by Owen Davis

(Novelized by)

Owen Davis

(From Owen Davis' play now being presented in New York by William A. Brady.—Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.)

"WHAT is it, Ken?" asked the girl breathlessly.

Both women were anxious. In the eyes of each was the light of protecting longing—that maternal glow a good woman feels when she senses danger for her beloved.

"You silly women! Why shouldn't I work? Don't stand popping your eyes out at me!"

The boy laughed with easy masculine superiority.

"I'm all right!" he boasted.

He kissed his mother. And this time he did not see how softly glowing was the pink of sweet Mary's cheek!

"You are all I have now, Ken!" Emily Nelson spoke with a sad tenderness. She could not know how dangerously near she was to dosing that "all she had"—once and forever!

"We are going to be happy—all or us! You'll see! Good-bye, mother."

Kenneth spoke with the easy boastfulness of one who sees his own joy just within reach. Mary Burk could not quite see how they were all to be happy! As Mrs. Nelson swept ahead down the corridor, she stepped back into the room, and with a deep feeling voiced her unselfish plea to Ken.

"Your father, Ken! He loves you!"

Ken had taken her head with the friendly glow of long years of friendship and affection. He dropped it now with harsh suddenness.

"Good-bye, Mary."

Fine feeling and beauty of purpose flooded Mary's eyes and turned her voice to the liquid music of her own Celtic poets.

"Ken! Her heart is just breaking for him!"

"Come, Mary!" called Mrs. Nelson. And Fate and Nature must again bide their time.

"I will see you tonight, Kha dear," elevator is most convenient, mother. I'll take you to your car."

"Car!" cried that lady of luxury a little bitterly, "it is only a taxi."

"Oh, I say! There is no need of that. You should have the things that belong to your position, you know."

Ken's assured voice trailed off down the hall.

Potter came out to the phone to order that "luncheon for a lady."

A LADY'S LUNCH

"Kitchen, pickle——Adolph——Hello ——Potter, 36. Lunch for three. Clear soup——filet of sole——chops and salad ——one bottle of the same wine we have been ordering——No——I will order more if we require it. At one thirty, please —— Yes——Served here. One waiter to act under my instructions. Thank you."

Potter concluded his task with obvious distaste. He could not know that he would never order another luncheon for "Potter, 36" and serve it to his young master and "Miss May" and Mr. Le Roy.

A knock at the door—a rat-tat-tat that took Potter over to the entrance and made him set the door ajar and then set it half to again with the impetus of his dislike for the crew who were coming to play with and sneer at his young master again.

"None of that," laughed Miss Kitty May. "This is not the subway, Potter!"

"Hello! Hello! Grand day, ain't it? What's wrong? Too ain't lookin' as happy as I'd like to see you," said Jim Garrity to Potter as that wellbred servitor stepped back offended at the easy-at-homeness of these bourgeois in his master's rooms.

"I beg your pardon," said Potter coldly.

"What for? What you been up to this time?" asked Jim the friendly.

"We passed Mr. Nelson in the lobby—he didn't see us; he was with"——began Kitty; then seeing Potter's expression she added airily:

"Just as well, I guess. We'll wait."

"Mr. Nelson will return shortly," said Potter, picking up his tray and making a dignified exit.

Kitty laughed. She had been putting him through his paces.

"There! You see what I mean! Why can't you act like he does?" she said to Jim whose imitation of a lady's chauffeur was about as successful as her own imitation of a lady.

Jim was undaunted in his meek self satisfaction. He would play any part that Kitty desired, however menial it was. But he had to play it after his own meagre talents. Jim had no aptitude for high finance. The outcome of it all was to prove just how good a business woman Kitty was.

"A man's got to be born that way. He can't make himself such a regular fool as that," said Jim with the American distaste for the flunky.

"Say Kitty, you got to get me a new job. I'm going to book the car."

"Don't be in a hurry," advised Dick.

"I ain't. It's the landlord. Lord! I do wish Kitty would stop playin' the races! Not that I ain't glad to lose the cat—I hate 'em anyhow—I miss my old cab horse. There's nothin' like a cab." Jim spoke in a tone of growing reminiscence.

"I wish I'd left you alone to drive one—or starve," said Kitty coldly.

"Go on! I ain't lookin' for gratitude, there ain't none in this world any more. Taxi cabs killed gratitude—same as they killed everything else any good. Remember what a place Broadway used to be. About 12 o'clock of a fine night—with the cabbies ridin' up and down—callin' 'Keb, sir—keb, sir!' That was nothin', wasn't it? That was human. Folks was happy in them days—a fellow used to be ridin' home—lookin' out at the sights."

Jim was enjoying his happy reminiscences—then he pulled himself up sharply to the bitter reality of these miserable days of taxis.

"They don't look at nothin' now—in a taxi; they don't—just that darned old clock!"

Jim's sudden old mood was bitter. That darned old clock" made graft almost too complicated a thing to his feeble intellect.

KITTY'S SECRET

Suddenly Dick spoke in a tone of genuine feeling. He knew Kitty—knew just what she was—knew just what she had done—and would do, perhaps, all through life. Dick Le Roy was a gaudy-pooled, gaudily dressed "song and dance artist"—Kitty was—well Kitty! And to Dick Le Roy she was—the girl he wanted.

"Kitty, what's the use? You're on a dead one, and you're most broke! This kid's a simp, and he's only a piker! Kitty! Why don't you lose him?"

Jim coughed and lit one of "the piker's" cigars.

Kitty's eyes took a faraway look.

"Never mind!" said Miss Kitty May Garrity firmly.

Dick leaned across the table. He could forget that Jim was there—he could forget anything but that Kitty was—just Kitty.

"You can't care for him—a wise girl like you."

"Can't I? It's none of your business anyway," said she in a pleasantly offhand manner.

Jim rose with a flourish, and addressed the floor.

"I can't read without my glasses, Dick's eatin' mushy again. He always was stuck on you!"

Dick turned on him with rising passion.

"Well! What about it! I wouldn't look to be headlined on a bill with a millionaire—but this 'mama's baby' grift is pretty punk! Mama will buy baby all the candy baby wants—gurgle, gurgle"—he mimicked with a sneer that massacred for a laugh—"but Mama tightens up when it comes to buying Paris hats for a soubrette."

He went over and took possession of Kitty's hand. All the happy-go-lucky laughter was gone out of his smoothly textured young-old face now.

Kitty shook off his detaining hand and jumped up angrily.

"You look out what you say!" she snarled.

Dick backed off in honest astonishment.

"My Gawd! Say, Kitty, what are you? Oh, cut out the bunk, Kitty! Quit kiddin' yourself!"

By this time he had recovered his poise, and the radiant smile that disclosed his strong white teeth.

Kitty spoke with impassioned earnestness:

"Dick, I wouldn't leave this boy, if he didn't have car fare—not yet anyhow—nor till I get the thing I want."

Dick knew the devious ways of "soubrettes"—and graft—and black mail.

Lightly he asked: "Are you figgerin' you can make this guy believe you're in the short second before she answered, Kitty stood staring back into the past—back into one morning a month ago. She saw a sobbing girl spurned in her pleading. She heard that girl cry: "I'll stick—I'm no grafter!" She saw a strong man putting that girl aside at the moment when he was forced into the open. She saw that girl flung back on herself—saw her fall shaken and trembling into a massive chair, while the man she longed for swung heavy doors between her life and his—and was gone. Gone out of her love—but not out of her life. Not yet, Charles Nelson! She heard that girl's burning vow: "If you leave me like this—now—that you don't have to, I'll get you. Charlie, don't make me hate you. Don't leave me—or I'll get you. I'll get you if it's the last thing I ever do."

And Kitty answered in a hard tone, with far deeper meaning that Dick or Jim could ever guess:

"I'm going to make the boy's father—pay!"

Dick was greatly relieved. Here was a game he could understand—or thought he could.

"Oh! I heard he was broke, but you'd know, of course. You wouldn't take any chances. Sorry I said anything, Kitty. Your judgment is bound to be O. K. I guess every fellow gets soft once in a while."

The Rescue

WHEN Philip's almost lifeless body was flung over the cliff it rushed down through the Summer air feet foremost. Then in obedience to the law of gravity, it spun round until, at the moment of impact with the water, the head and shoulders plunged first into the waves.

At that point the depth of the sea was sixty feet at the very base of the rock. At each half-tide, and especially in stormy weather, an irresistible current swept away all sand deposit, and sheered off projecting masses of stone so effectually that, in the course of time, the overhanging cliff must be undermined and fall into the sea.

High tide or low, there was always sufficient water to float a battleship, and the place was noted as a favorite nook for salmon at that season, preparing for their annual visit to the sylvan streams of the mountain valleys.

The lordly salmon is peculiar in his habits. Delighting, as one period of the year, to roam through the ocean wilds, at another he seeks shallow rivers, in whose unpromising depths he scarce finds room to turn his portly frame.

And the law protects him most jealously.

In the river he is guarded like a king, and when he wishes at its mouth, lazily making up his mind to leave the briny for water, as a monarch might visit Hoboken for a change of air, he can only be caught under certain severe restrictions.

He must not be netted within so many rods of the seaward limit of the estuary; he may not be caught wholesale; the nets must have a maximum length of four and a half fathoms; he must not be set between 7 p. m. on a Friday and 7 a. m. on a Monday.

Viewed in every aspect, the salmon is given exceptional chances of longevity. His price is high as his evilness of reputation, and the obvious sequel to all these precautions is that certain nefarious persons known as poachers try every artifice to defeat the law and capture him.

A favorite dodge is to run out a large quantity of nets in just such a tideway as the foot of the cliff crowned by Grange House. None can spy the operations from the land, while a close watch seaward gives many chances of escape from enterprising water bailiffs who, moreover, can sometimes be made conveniently drunk.

When Philip hurtled into the plashing his body shone white, like the passage of some gigantic bird.

Indeed, a man who was leisurely pulling the bulk of a strong canoe—while two others paid out a net as that its sweeping curves might embarrass any wandering salmon who found himself within its meshes—marked the falling body in the instantaneous passage, and thought at first that some huge sea fowl had dived after its prey.

The King of Diamonds

A Thrilling Story by Louis Tracy

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1913, by Edward J. Clode

WHEN he awoke to find Willie standing by his bedside with soothing words.

"It is all right, father. You were disturbed in your sleep. Don't get up yet. It is only 8 o'clock."

At that hour a policeman left his cottage in a village on the Yorkshire coast, and walked leisurely toward the Grange House.

He traversed four miles of rough country, and the sun was hot, so he did not hurry. A small fair patch was his beat—the farm. There were no signs of activity such as may be expected in the vicinity of that hour.

He examined three sides of the building carefully—he was proud of his thoroughness—and waited many minutes before he knocked at the door. There was no answer. He knocked again more loudly. The third time his summons would have aroused the Seven Sleepers, but none came.

He tried the door, and rattled it, peered in at the windows, stood back in the garden, and looked up at the bedrooms.

"A queer business," he muttered as he turned unwillingly to leave the place. "Ay, a very queer business," he said again. "I must go on to Stockdale. 'Tis ask' lingthes about this Dr. Williams afore I report so I expect."

Latest in Today's Stock Markets

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks were dull today and closed on a slightly lower level. Trading was as uninteresting as it was restricted. News developments had little effect upon prices. New York for the whole session transactions amounted to only 70,100 shares. A feature there was earlier pressure upon New Haven which sank to 75, its lowest figure. There was a steady tone at the start and some advances, but when stock came out it was found the market had little support.

In Boston there was a firmer undertone in late trading. New Haven closed with a gain of ¾, after making a new low in this market. Rights advanced 6 points. Boston & Maine was up 1¼. Boston Elevated advanced 2. Mines were irregular. Cocosin closed at a decline of 1⅛ and Calumet & Arizona was also being a little lower. There were small gains for Butte & Superior, Granby and North Butte. Edison was a weak issue. It sold at 261 on Friday and closed at 257 today. New York was irregular at the end and price changes ranged narrow. There were fractional gains for Canadian Pacific, Southern Pacific, Steel, American Smelting and New Haven.

There were small losses for Missouri Pacific, Reading, American Can, Amalgamated and Mexican Petroleum. Trading slumber finished at an advance of 1⅛ and Lehigh Valley was off 1⅝.

The weekly statement of averages of the New York associated banks and trust companies shows: Excess cash reserve $5,142,760, increased $7,991,950; loans decreased $4,669,000; specie increased $4,631,000; legals increased $2,093,000; deposits increased $2,562,000; circulation increased $24,000.

Stock Markets Were Dull.

At the opening in New York the tone was heavy, and although some issues advanced fractionally, this was soon followed by a recessional movement throughout the list. Business was quiet and when a little stock was supplied offers sank at once. At the beginning the supply seemed very limited but the decline of New Haven to the lowest price it has ever touched stimulated selling.

American stocks were irregular in London, but above New York parity. Certain issues ruled higher there, and there was more demand for Canadian profits. There was not much speculation on Continental bourses. The European situation is unchanged in general, but the monetary outlook has improved. It is expected that the French government will issue its $280,000,000 national defense loan on December 15, but it is intimated that even after it has been floated that France will need successive issues of new foreign securities.

Early in the New York market National Railway of Mexico preferred advanced nearly a point. Nothing developed in the Mexican situation to affect stocks much. Pressure was exposed to New Haven and Missouri Pacific, the latter selling at the lowest price in years.

Administration Currency Bill.

The six Democrats who form the Administration force in the banking committee have completed the currency bill which President Wilson will have enacted upon which the battle will be fought in the Senate. The full banking committee met today, but did not do nothing one which altered the situation. Republican members said Senator Hitchcock has not finished drafting the opposition bill and will not be ready to report until some time next week. The factions are carrying at their work. The factions are further apart than ever and nothing new is being said by Administration leaders about getting a measure passed at this session.

Senator Weeks says that no currency legislation can be expected before January 15, and this estimate is regarded as conservative. It is admitted by observers friendly to the President that the currency question will be debated for weeks in the Senate.

It is believed that each report from the Banking Committee will have its signatures. Senator Hitchcock, Democrat, will sign the Republican report, in all probability.

Secretary Bryan Beaten.

It is stated in a Washington dispatch that Secretary of State Bryan has yielded to his demand that the federal reserve notes to be issued under authority of the administration's currency law shall be redeemed in either gold or lawful money. The storm of protests against this proposed attack on the gold standard has moved even the Secretary of State to heed the voice of the people.

As it will be reported to the Senate the administration bill these notes are to be made legal tender and payable in gold, either at the reserve banks or the Treasury. The reserve for these note issues is a gold requirement of 40 per cent; 35 reserve for deposits, 33⅓ per cent in either gold or lawful money. The federal reserve agent is to hold gold in the reserves held by the member banks, but not in the reserve of the regional banks.

New Haven Dividend Meeting.

The question whether the New Haven board's dividend rate will be maintained at 6 per cent. per annum or lowered will be settled upon December 1 when directors of President Elliott for the dividend meeting of directors. The road's figures decreased $225,000 in the first two days of November. But this was an improvement over the record of October 31. During that period Boston & Maine showed an increase of $28,000, the Maine Central an increase of $4,000, and the Boston & Albany an increase of $12,000. This is encouraged by the improvement, but it is not thought that it will be such as to affect whether the $40,000,000 short term New Haven notes due on December 1 will be paid, or said they would be taken care of. There was a Wall Street rumor that New Haven directors were considering withdrawing the $67,524,000 debenture bond issue, and when Mr. Elliott was asked about the basis for the tale he said: "The rumor man must have been working overtime to get up that one." Regarding the general outlook in his section he said: "Directors find that trade conditions in New England are looking up a little."

"Do you intend to resign, Mr. Elliott?" "Why," he replied, "such a report is too absurd to consider."

Repudiation by States.

Regarding the Roosevelt statement that the United States is determined to have South American republics pay their debts, the London Financial Times points to open letter addressed to President Wilson and calling attention to the repudiation record of some commonwealths in this country. The letter reads in part:

"The sole defaulter in Spanish America is Honduras, while there are at least nine States in North America whose obligations for many years have remained unpaid, viz., Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and West Virginia. The defaulted debts of these States with accrued interest is estimated at upward of $250,000,000. Furthermore, several of these States have gone so far as to formally repudiate liability to bondholders. Some of the excuses put forward are unworthy of serious consideration and are the usual type offered by dishonest debtors."

Financial News in Brief.

Net earnings of railroads in this country decreased $11,282,000 in August.

It is reported in New York that a number of concerns represented on the stock exchange in that city will retire from business at the first of the new year. Many houses have not done enough business of late to pay expenses.

The independent steel concern is running at less than one-fourth of its plant capacity and the steel trade is steadily becoming quieter in general.

It is said that European consumers of coppers are beginning to curtail operations. There is no more demand for metal at 15½ cents a pound either in this country or Europe.

Work has been suspended at the Boston and Corbin property for the Winter.

United States exports for the nine months ended in September totalled $1,333,058,772. The total for the same 1912 period was $1,052,676,840.

Girl of 16 Kills a Thieving Bear

MONTICELLO, N. Y., Nov. 15.—Miss Mary Smith, sixteen, shot a thieving 250-pound bear with a rifle on her father's farm and won the distinction of being the first woman to kill such an animal in Sullivan County in half a century.

GRACE BRIEN, East Boston miss who claims honors as typical American girl.

TYPICAL CLAIM MADE BY EAST BOSTON GIRL

Miss Grace Brien of East Boston is the latest claimant for the prize which will be awarded to the "typical American girl."

Miss Brien is not of the athletic type. She is tall and slender and has a most dignified poise. Her features denote kindness and sympathy.

Brown hair, gray eyes, White street, East Boston, who sent the photo of Miss Brien to the "Typical" editor, believes that the young miss possesses all the qualities needed to win the prize.

"Girls with light blue eyes or dark brown eyes, send in your pictures, and don't forget to mention the color of eyes and hair, as well as other claims you have for the Typical Girl contest. Such items as these, Miss Brien's judges in their task, which is daily assuming larger and larger proportions.

The prize, which will be presented to the "Typical American Girl" when she is selected by the judges in this great contest, will be a life-sized oil portrait of herself, painted by a noted New England artist, from personal sittings.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

The Electric Motor Car Club of Boston held a most interesting session at the Hotel Thorndike last evening. President Day Baker being in the chair. At the conclusion of the regular dinner the reports of the various committees were presented, that of the show committee being particularly interesting in view of the fact that Boston will witness at the inauguration of the electric motor vehicle display in the ballroom of the Copley Plaza. The committee having this display in charge announced that this exhibit would be the best and most complete that has ever been held in this city, as it brings together under one roof the representative electric pleasure vehicles.

It was stated that almost every dealer handling an electric car in this city would be represented in the display of one or more models of open and closed vehicles.

The decorations will be simple in the extreme and decidedly effective and every measure has been taken to impress upon the public the real value of an electric vehicle. The various committees were instructed that they have performed their respective duties in a most excellent manner, and, so far as can be seen, there was no reason whatsoever to question the ultimate success.

The report of President Baker on the work of the delegation to the convention of the Electric Vehicle Association of America, recently held in Chicago, told just what had been accomplished by the New England delegation and the great work done in national fields by the national association. It was to him a matter of great pride and pleasure to have in the ranks three New Englanders placed upon the board of officers of the national association and he felt that the interest of the New England branch were well cared for, and that this section of the country has matured at this convention its reputation for progressiveness.

* * *

Those who have the idea that an electric vehicle is only a goody one should remember the experience of Sales Manager J. F. Coolidge of the E. M. F. Co., who during his recent Chicago trip, was commanded to court and fined $10 for violating the Chicago speed law. Two days later, "Pat" Whiting, who was driving a Buick car in New York city, was arrested by a traffic officer and informed that he was travelling at the rate of thirty-two miles an hour, which is against the law. The driving of an electric evidently does not require the driver from the suggestions of the traffic police.

The first Studebaker "Four" and "Six" produced by the Detroit plants in the regular factory run have been covering the mountain roads near Pittsburgh, Pa., and Roanoke, Va., for several weeks and have passed on to Florida, where some elaborate cooling tests will be made to confirm the results attained in experimental tests and prove the regular models.

ELLIOTT DENIES THAT HE'LL QUIT THE NEW HAVEN

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Wall Street heard a rumor that Howard Elliott was soon to resign as chairman of the New Haven system. It was news to Mr. Elliott, when the rumor was called to his attention, said emphatically that there was not the slightest basis in fact for it.

The story, in the opinion of New Haven officials, originated with speculators who are short of New Haven issues.

The executive committee of the system met yesterday and transacted a mass of routine business. Among other things it was announced that the $40,000,000 of short term notes of the company, due on December 1, will be taken care of.

San Francisco Pleads Only for Its Rights in Hetch-Hetchy

It is time to speak plainly about the men and interests opposing the Hetch-Hetchy bill. It is evident that Senators are being imposed upon. And there is danger that silence may lead to the postponement of the bill until another session.

The opposition stirred up by such men as Robert Underwood Johnson is honest opposition, but it is opposition of men who are constitutionally unable to view a question of this kind in a reasonable light. These men and women assume that covering the floor of the Hetch-Hetchy gorge with water would destroy the beauty of the spot. With most of them this is pure assumption, since not one in a thousand of the signers of Mr. Johnson's petitions ever saw the Hetch-Hetchy or ever will. The Hetch-Hetchy is the most-talked-of and the least-visited scenic spot on earth.

As a matter of fact, men who love nature as well as does Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson and who are much more familiar with the Hetch-Hetchy than he can possibly be, are quite sure that the charm of the Hetch-Hetchy will be enhanced by turning the swampy floor of the valley into a beautiful mountain lake.

But setting aside the difference of opinion, the truth remains that the needs, the health and the very safety of a million American men, women and children are highly paramount to the esthetic enjoyment of the two or three hundred persons who annually undertake the rather arduous trip to the Hetch-Hetchy.

Senators should bear in mind that the rainfall on California's great mountain watersheds does not flow down to the sea in great rivers, as happens in the East. The great bulk of the water descends in sudden freshets or goes underground through the immense gravel beds underlying that floor of the ancient sea which now is the twin valley of the Sacramento and San Joaquin. To make any real use of these waters they must be stored.

If the great agricultural valleys had sufficient rainfall for crops, the question of obtaining a water supply for San Francisco would not be so acute. That city might, at great cost, abandon Hetch-Hetchy and utilize the waters of the McCloud, the Sacramento or the Eel rivers. But every drop of those waters is needed now or in the near future to serve the farmers of the Sacramento Valley.

But the surplus waters of the Tuolumne, which would otherwise go to waste in destructive floods, can be stored in the Hetch-Hetchy reservoir and be drawn upon by San Francisco for its sustenance without depriving the irrigated lands of that region of the water the farmers need. So that not only the necessities of the great communities clustered around San Francisco Bay will be ministered to by the Hetch-Hetchy plan, but the vital interests of the people of the two great interior valleys will be fairly and honestly conserved.

FOR THE HETCH-HETCHY BILL NOW AWAITING ACTION IN THE SENATE SPECIFICALLY GUARDS THE RIGHTS OF THE FARMERS TO THE FIRST USE OF THE WATERS AND EMPOWERS SAN FRANCISCO TO USE ONLY THE STORED SURPLUS FLOOD WATERS WHICH NOW GO TO WASTE.

And this, Senators, should be reason sufficient to obtain your favorable votes upon San Francisco's reasonable request.

But, Senators, there is other opposition far different in character from the honest and mistaken opposition of Mr. Johnson and his associates, and of this you should be apprised. That opposition is financed and fostered by the corporations which own water rights acquired in careless times for a song, and now held for sale at enormous figures. And more particularly is this opposition stirred up by one corporation known as the Yosemite Power Company.

Two miles from the Hetch-Hetchy, lower down on the Tuolumne stream, this company has possession of the water rights in the canyon known as the Poopenaut Valley. If Congress grants San Francisco the right to store the Tuolumne waters in the Hetch-Hetchy reservoir, the water rights of this private corporation are not worth the filing fees. If Congress refuses that city's request, the water rights of this corporation whose holdings are not under Federal control are worth $15,000,000 of anyone's money.

The difference between $1.50 and $15,000,000, Senators, measures exactly the fervency and zeal and pertinacity of the opposition to San Francisco's use of the Hetch-Hetchy reservoir.

This corporation, if San Francisco's petition is disregarded and the Hetch-Hetchy grant refused, will impound these very same waters for PRIVATE PROFIT and will compel the city of San Francisco and the farmers of the irrigable regions to pay more for power developed from these waters than the water and the power together would cost the people of San Francisco and the farmers if you, Senators, permit that city to carry out its great undertaking.

This is the milk in the cocoanut. That is the reason Senators are persistently besieged by "Nature lovers." That is the "scenery" which has the real charm for these esthetic patriots. The beautiful vision which enraptures their contemplative and expectant souls is not one of blue sky and peak clouds and sunset. It is a vision of $15,000,000 in hard iron dollars.

Senators of the United States, you have freely granted to Seattle, to Portland, to Los Angeles, the use of the water in Federal reservations in the ranges of the Sierras, the Cascades and the Coast mountains. And the people of San Francisco rejoiced with their neighbors over the bounty of the national Congress.

What has San Francisco done that she cannot have the same generous treatment at the hands of our common government? Why must she beg for twelve long years for the same boon so graciously extended to his sisters? Are her people pariahs? Or are her people lepers?

Senators, San Francisco has stood up bravely under a disaster the like of which never fell with such enormity of loss upon any city in the history of the world. Her people have neither whined, nor begged, nor will they. But they suffered. Seven years after this awful destruction they are preparing to hold a great exposition for the world, and they have not asked the national government for a dollar, though every exposition ever held in this country has so been aided. Neither in their distress nor in their great struggles to build up again the city so dear to them have they appeared asking alms of the Congress, but have the proud consciousness that they have borne themselves like courageous American men and women, and now they come asking only fair play and their national rights to use the waters of their own mountains for the vital necessities of their own people.

Senators, give San Francisco her rights.

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER V.

TOWARD the end of their second week in Boston Julia and Caryl Marvin packed their few belongings, surrendered their trunk to an expressman who was to take it to their new rooms, and said goodbye to the kind-faced matron of the home at which they had been staying.

"I am sorry to have you leave us, Miss Marvin," this woman assured Julia, pressing her hand warmly. "It doesn't seem right that we are allowed to shelter the inexperienced girls like you and your sister for only a fortnight, and then let them go their lonely way. But with the constant demands we have made upon us for rooms there is nothing else that we can do. Goodbye—and if I can help you at any time, please let me know."

To Caryl the matron gave only a rather cool handshake and a brief word of farewell. She was a woman who, by stilted and careful speech, tried to conceal the deficiencies in her early education, and she suspected the younger of making fun of her behind her back.

"She's a horrid cat!" declared Caryl to her sister as the door of the home closed behind them. "Thank heaven we are free of her!"

"Oh, Caryl," Julia protested, "she is very kind, and was always most pleasant to us."

"Pleasant!" sniffed Caryl. "She got on my nerves—always snooping around to see if we had been doing something we shouldn't do! I am tired of having people look after me."

She drew down the corners of her mouth and wrinkled her nose in imitation of the matron's expression of countenance. "Young ladies!" she mimicked in a high-pitched voice, "I trust that you are not breaking the rules of the house and cooking in your room. I seem to scent boiling coffee."

The imitation was irresistibly funny and Julia laughed in spite of herself.

"Well, don't worry about her any more, sister dear," she comforted. "We are free of her forever. We are our own mistresses now. And I don't know," she went on after a moment's pause, "that I am so glad of that as I expected to be either. This city is so big."

"That's why I like it," asserted Caryl, who was today bubbling over with high spirits. "It's so big and romantic, and something thrilling may be waiting for us right around the corner. I wish an exciting adventure would come along right here and now."

Unconsciously she began to hum a merry little tune as she walked. Her color was high and her rounded form showed to advantage in her blue serge dress. She was slender, yet not thin; she had a graceful figure and was aware of the fact.

The sisters stopped at a corner to allow a car to pass before attempting to cross the street.

"That's a pretty tune," said a masculine voice close by them.

Julia started at the sound. At Caryl's elbow stood a man. He was well-dressed, but wore more jewelry than good taste would sanction. He was smoking, and in her momentary glance, Julia noticed that the hand he raised to remove the cigarette from his lips was pink-nailed and over-manicured. He lifted his hat to Caryl and smiled.

"Hello, girlie!" he greeted. How's everything?"

Julia grasped her sister's arm. "Don't speak to him!" she murmured. "Come along!"

They hastened across the street, but when they reached the other curb the man was at the younger girl's side again.

"Don't be in a hurry," he said calmly. "I'm a great little sticker. How about a bite to eat for just us three, eh?"

There was a note in his voice that made Julia flush with anger. She turned sharply upon him.

"Will you go away and leave us alone?" she asked hotly. "Or shall I call a policeman?"

The man's swarthy face creased into a smile. "Old stuff, kid!" he chided, "old stuff! What do you think I am? Besides it's not you I'm thinking about—it's the little queen that's walking with you. If you don't like me, why you can step out."

Panic-stricken, the girls walked rapidly down the street. Julia was white and sick with a sudden dread. Her knees seemed weak, and in her palms she felt the clammy sweat of fear. Behind them, she and Caryl could hear the footsteps of the man.

"I'm a pretty good walker myself," they heard him announce once loudly.

For two blocks he followed them while they, with terror of hunted creatures, almost ran in their desire to elude him. Reaching a traffic filled street, they plunged into the hurrying human tide flowing there and did not slacken their pace until they had gone some distance. Then they stopped and looked back timidly. The man was not to be seen, but, even so, they did not feel safe and kept their rapid gait along the several blocks that lay between them and their new lodging. It was only when they were at last in the front room which they had engaged that they paused for breath. Even here they controlled voices and faces until the landlady, who had escorted them upstairs and remained to chat with them for a minute, had taken her departure.

"Oh!" gasped Julia, when the door had closed behind the woman, "it was awful."

She sank upon the bed and lay for a moment, pale and weak.

"Caryl," she said slowly at last, pulling herself to a sitting posture, "you expressed yourself as longing for an adventure. I hope you don't want any more of that kind." She tried to smile, then shuddered. "It was horrible!" she exclaimed.

"It certainly was," agreed Caryl emphatically, sobered by the recent experience. "But," she added a few minutes later, her eyes sparkling mischievously, "you shouldn't have been frightened, Julia, for I was the one that he thought pretty!" And she laughed as she uttered the jest.

UPON THE SAND

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

ALL love that has not friendship for its base
Is like a mansion built upon the sand.
Though brave its walls as any in the land,
And its tall turrets lift their heads in grace;
Though skilful and accomplished artists trace
Most beautiful designs on every hand,
And gleaming statues in dim niches stand,
And fountains play in some flow'r-hidden place.

Yet, when from the frowning east a sudden gust
Of adverse fate is blown, or sad rains fall
Day in, day out, against its yielding wall,
Lo! the fair structure crumbles to dust.
Love, to endure life's sorrow and earth's woe,
Needs friendship's solid masonwork below.

If We Want to Make Boston the Most Popular Port on This Side the Atlantic We Should Demand That the Custom House Force Be Increased, Not Diminished

It is PROPOSED at Washington to effect certain economies in the collection of our revenue by reducing the force at the Custom House in Boston.

Such a proposition is attended with a VERY GREAT DANGER to the DEVELOPMENT of our port business.

We have recently entered upon a SUCCESSFUL campaign to induce the public to APPRECIATE our facilities as a port and its proximity to Europe.

The slogan "SAILING FROM BOSTON" has produced results.

Four new lines of steamships have been added in five months to our ocean-carrying trade—the Hamburg-American line, the North German Lloyd line, the Russian-American line and the Navigazione General Italiana line. We are not SATISFIED even with these results of our struggle for commercial supremacy.

Now when we are on the very THRESHOLD of SUCCESS, a blow from the national government would be like the STAB of Brutus. And the impairment of our facilities for rapid inspection of baggage by our custom officials, would be a blow indeed.

An important item in the FACILITIES of a port is the FREEDOM FROM UNNECESSARY DELAYS IN THE INSPECTION OF BAGGAGE BY CUSTOM OFFICIALS.

Nothing will drive people away from the port more EFFECTIVELY than long waits on cold docks owing to an insufficient number of inspectors.

If we are going to OBLIGE those who come to America through Boston to stand upon the crowded wharf until their patience is exhausted and their nerves set on edge, awaiting the unnecessary delays in the work of inspecting their baggage, we might as well abandon the attempt to develop our foreign passenger service.

WE WANT MORE INSPECTORS, NOT LESS.

Our port is growing so fast that our present force of inspectors WILL NOT LONG DO THE WORK ADEQUATELY.

In the Customs Department, Boston has the reputation with the department of being one of the best managed, if not the best managed, port in the country. There is less friction, less delay, less evasion of laws, stricter compliance with regulations than at any other port. Credit for this is due to the merchants of Boston as well as the officials at the Custom House.

This HIGH STANDARD should be MAINTAINED.

It cannot be if any FALSE IDEAS OF ECONOMY on the part of the Treasury Department impair the EFFICIENCY of the Customs force by unwise reduction of its numbers.

When a commercial house is GROWING, the manager always PROVIDES the help to do the INCREASED business. Frequently he SPENDS money to MAKE money. He knows that his customers must be served INTELLIGENTLY and PROMPTLY. No parsimony guides his actions. He seeks to avoid waste, but he never permits himself to retard the inflow of trade by making his patrons impatient at delays in service.

The United States government is the BIGGEST COMMERCIAL HOUSE we have in this country. Its CUSTOMERS are ALL of the people. They stand before its counters of the Custom Houses to be served. THEY SHOULD HAVE PROMPT ATTENTION. Their complaints are never at the cost of the service, if it is efficient. They have reason to kick at a government that INADEQUATELY serves them, even if a few dollars are saved thereby.

New England Is Glad to Be the Meeting Place of the Grange Associations—They Are Doing a Splendid Work

New England is glad to be the section of the country where the national convention of the Grange associations is now holding its conclave.

The proceedings of this important convention call to mind the great service which these powerful alliances of American farmers have rendered the country for many years.

People in the cities do not sufficiently appreciate the remarkable fact that NEARLY ALL THE PROGRESSIVE REFORMS which are gradually being adopted for the great relief of the nation have been pioneered by the farmers' alliances.

These splendid organizations in the West have been the national bulwark against corporate greed. They resisted the aggressions and extortions of the railroads in the heyday of corporate power and greed, when everything was wide open and multi-millionaires were made over night.

The Grange has done and is doing good work for the public welfare also in New England.

At this very moment, perhaps, the Interstate Commerce Commission is reading the statement of Mr. B. L. Cummings, the chairman of the committee on transportation of the State Grange of Maine, in protest against the attempt of the Boston & Maine Railroad to advance its rates. Mr. Cummings, speaking for 30,000 Maine farmers, said:

> "Our rates between us and our markets have been so tremendously increased within the past few years that it is a serious matter to our business."

The farmers heed as powerful and as efficient an organization as the labor unions. Let them develop their Granges into militant bodies. They will help to preserve the balance of power which the rapid concentrations of wealth in this country now menace.

In the heart of every patriotic American there lies somewhere a peculiar respect for the American farmer. With his simple life we associate the rugged virtues, and in his background we call up the picture of those embattled farmers who,

> "By the rude bridge which arched the flood, > Fired the shot heard 'round the world."
